The most recent example of this was extra funding made available to the North Wales Coast District to help victims of flooding. Additional allocations have also been made to assist with a local increase in applications caused by, for example, an influx of refugees from other countries to individual Districts. Such allocations are based upon information provided by Districts.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what provision exists so that applicants for the disability living allowance who have had their application rejected are informed of their right to appeal;

(2) what steps are taken to ensure the appropriate competence of adjudication officers who assess claimants for the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 20 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Questions on Disability Living Allowance (DLA) asking about (i) information given to customers on the right to appeal, and (ii) the steps taken to ensure the appropriate level of competence of Adjudication Officers.

I should first of all explain that when notification of the decision of an Adjudication Officer is sent out to a customer, an information sheet accompanies it. Amongst other information, reference to a right of review is made, in the event of disallowance of an initial claim to DLA. Similarly, following an unsuccessful review of a contested decision on a claim customers are advised of their entitlement to an appeal. I have enclosed for your attention copies of the pertinent narratives detailing the information given to customers.

Adjudication officers are independent of the Department and make decisions based on evidence and the law. Monitoring is carried out by the Central Adjudication Service (CAS) on behalf of the Chief Adjudication Officer. Accuracy figures are routinely collected and published and Adjudication Officers are given ongoing support and training to ensure that decision making is informed and consistent.

In addition to the monitoring performed by CAS the Disability Living Allowance Unit (DLAU) has an Adjudication Checking and Advice Team (ACAT) which also acts as a monitor. Customer complaints, difficulties and suggestions together with staff suggestions, the results of monitoring and other quality initiatives to lift service are fed into training as a matter of course.

The DLAU are in the process of reviewing the role of ACAT. The team is to be increased in size and its remit extended to address issues raised both internally and externally.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters he has received on the subject of beggars in the last three months.

Mr. Burt: Statistics are not kept on the numbers of letters concerning beggars.

Incomes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current take-up rate of income support by those potentially eligible to claim in the 55 to 65-year age group for (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Estimates of the take-up of income support are available for pensioners and non-pensioner family types and can be found in "Income Related Benefits —Estimates of Take-up in 1990 and 1991" published earlier this year, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the projected average income for single pensioners (a) male and (b) female between 1994 and 2000; and what estimate he has made of average income for full-time employment in the same time period.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Availability-for-work Rules

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list changes made in the availability-for-work rules for each year since 1979; and how many claimants were so affected.

Mr. Burt: There has been no major change since 1979 to the long-standing basic condition that all those claiming benefits for unemployment must be immediately available for work. Various concessions to the availability rules and changes in the groups who are exempt from satisfying this condition have been made. These, excluding minor and textual changes, are as follows:

Changes to the availability for work rules in unemployment benefit legislation

A person undertaking duties in an emergency deemed to be available, (SI 1982-96).

A person attending workcamps deemed to be available for a maximum of 14 days, (SI 1982-96).

A person engaged in providing a service deemed to be available if ready to accept employment or attend an interview at not less than 24 hours notice, (SI 1982-96).

Availability may be deemed in the period between a doubt arising on availability and a decision by the adjudication officer in cases where Unemployment Benefit is already in payment, (SI 1988/689).

1989

Onus of proof placed on the claimant to show he has reasonable prospects of obtaining employment given his stated restrictions on his availability, (SI 1989/1324).

1993

A person providing a service as a "volunteer" deemed to be available if ready to accept employment or attend an interview at not less than 48 hours notice, (SI 1993/1754).

Changes to exemptions from the requirement to be available for employment as a condition of entitlement to Supplementary Benefit/Income Support

Start of regulated scheme, (previously Supplementary Benefits Commission had wide powers and issued written guidance to local officers), (SI 1980/1586).

1981

Men over 60 but below pension age who would otherwise be entitled to the long-term rate of normal requirements exempted, (SI 1981/1526.

1982

People who worked part-time by reason of some disease or disablement were exempted, (SI 1982/907).

A person remanded in custody or committed in custody for trial or to be sentenced exempted, (SI 1982/907).

The exemption for those in specified circumstances in relevant education (for example where the claimant had the care of a dependent child or where there was no parent and nobody acting in the place of a parent) was extended to 19 year olds in non advanced education, (SI 1982/907).

All men over 60 exempted, (SI 1983/463).

Those caring for a member of the assessment unit who was temporarily sick with no alternative means of care exempted, (SI 1983/1000).

An exemption extended to those in relevant education living away from parents or a guardian who were unable to support him financially, (SI 1987/358).

1988

Introduction of Income Support, (SI 1987/1967).

Removal of discretion to exempt those whose circumstances were "analogous" to those prescribed as being exempt, (SI 1987/1967).

A member of a couple looking after children while the other partner is temporarily abroad exempted, (SI 1988/1228).

Students within the definition of "deaf" for educational grant purposes exempt, (SI 1990/1657).

Exemption extended to people accompanying children abroad for medical treatment, (SI 1990/547).

A carer became exempt in the eight weeks after ceasing to meet the exemption criteria (e.g. after the death of the person for whom they were caring), (SI 1991/1559).

1991

Exemption extended to those living in residential care and nursing homes engaged in some employment, (SI 1991/1559).

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of severe disablement allowance receive an increase of benefit for (a) an adult dependant and (b) child dependants; and what is the average number of children per claimant.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

	Number
Number of Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA) beneficiaries receiving an adult dependency increase	4,000
Number of SDA beneficiaries receiving a child dependency increase (CDI)	2,000
Average number of children per SDA beneficiary receiving one or more CDIs	1·6

Housing and Council Tax Benefits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average amount of housing benefit payable to people in full-time work;

(2) what is the average amount of council tax benefit payable to people in full-time work.

Mr. Hague: In Great Britain, in May 1992, the latest date for which information is available, the average weekly amount of housing benefit for cases without income support, where there was earned income, was £25·02. Information for council tax benefit is not available.

Data source:

The May 1992 Housing Benefit Management Information System annual one per cent. sample of cases.

Notes:

1. Claimants in receipt of Income Support cannot be in full time work, so have been excluded.
2. Information on the number of hours worked is not collected, the information therefore includes any case where either a claimant and/or partner receives earnings.
3. The information refers to benefit units, these may be a single person or a couple.
4. As the information is from a sample taken at a specific point it cannot be taken to represent the whole year.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average amount of council tax benefit payable to people who also receive (a) unemployment benefit, (b) invalidity benefit and (c) severe disablement allowance;

(2) what is the average amount of housing benefit payable to people who also receive (i) unemployment benefit, (ii) invalidity benefit and (iii) severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Hague: In Great Britain, in May 1992, the latest date for which information is available, the average amount of housing benefit payable to persons in receipt of unemployment benefit, invalidity benefit and severe disablement allowance was £34·25, £25·43 and £32·18 respectively. Information for council tax benefit is not available.

Data Source:

The Housing Benefit Management Information System annual 1 per cent. sample and the Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry of May 1992.

Notes:

1. The information refers to benefit units, these may be a single person or a couple.

2. Cases selected include those where either the claimant or the partner were in receipt of any of the benefits.
3. Some cases may fall into more than one category; eg a claimant may receive Unemployment Benefit and the partner Invalidity Benefit.
4. The information excludes all cases where Housing Benefit entitlement is less than 50 pence per week.
5. As the information is from a sample taken at a specific point it cannot be taken to represent the whole year.
6. The information for Unemployment Benefit uses a different analysis from that published in Social Security Statistics.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people now receive severe disablement allowance; and how many receive age allowances (a) at the higher rate, (b) at the middle rate and (c) at the lower rate.

Mr. Scott: As at 4 April 1992, the latest year for which actual figures are available, there were 302,000[1] recipients of severe disablement allowance. The numbers entitled to the higher, middle and lower rate age allowances were 204,000[1], 52,000[1] and 45,000[1] respectively. We estimate that as at April 1993 there were 313,000[2] recipients of severe disablement allowance.

State Pensions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has for the number of (a) men and (b) women reaching retirement age in (i) 2000, (ii) 2005, (iii) 2010 and (iv) 2020 who will not qualify for a full basic state pension.

Mr. Hague: The data held are insufficient to allow reliable estimates to be made in the form requested.

At present, approximately 90 per cent. of men reaching state pension age have underlying entitlement to a full category A basic retirement pension based on their own contributions. This proportion is not expected to alter significantly in the future. The equivalent position for women is that approximately 20 per cent. currently have underlying entitlement to a full category A retirement pension. By 2020, this proportion is expected to increase to between half and two thirds.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been received since 13 September 1993 for industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema; how many claims were successful; how many claimants were refused benefit because of failing (a) the breathing capacity test and (b) the category 1 pneumoconiosis test; and if he will break down the figures by social security district.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The table gives the information by Benefits Agency area directorate as at 12 June 1994—not all the claims received would have been decided by that date:

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which the compensation recovery unit will take money away from asbestosis victims who have successfully pursued their claims in the civil courts;

(2) in what circumstances (a) the mining industry and (b) other industries are liable to compensation recovery unit deductions where victims of industrial disease have successfully made claims for compensation;

(3) what are the circumstances in which terminally ill people face recovery of court awards from the compensation recovery unit; and what diseases are covered by the rules.

Mr. Scott: Under the provisions of the compensation recovery scheme, an amount equivalent to the value of relevant benefits paid in consequence of asbestosis or other disease, accident or injury should be deducted if the compensation award exceeds £2,500.

The scheme applies to all types of industry and the provisions make no distinction between claims made in the civil courts and out-of-court settlements, nor between types of disease.

Compensation claims from people who are terminally ill may also be affected, but the legislation prescribes certain exempt cases, including payments made under the terms of the pneumoconiosis compensation scheme operated by agreement between British Coal and the mining unions.

D. Gale

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action has been taken to ensure that the decisions of the Independent Tribunal Service with reference to the appeal of D. Gale (NR158681C) are communicated promptly to the local offices.

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, his honour Judge Thorpe. He will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the cost of the one per cent. addition currently paid to the holders of appropriate personal pensions aged 30 years or over in a full year.

Mr. Hague: The cost was estimated to be around £165 million for a full year in the financial memorandum accompanying the Social Security Act 1993, which introduced this measure. There is as yet no evidence to suggest that this estimate needs to be revised.

Severe Hardship Payments

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds applied for severe hardship payments; and how many were granted for each quarter since 1988.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table. More than one application may be made by the same individual until a job or youth training place is secured.

Home Responsibilities Protection

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of (a) men and (b) women currently earning less than the lower earnings limit; and, of these, how many are covered by the home responsibilities protection scheme.

Mr. Hague: It is estimated that 0·9 million men and 2·3 million women earn less than the lower earnings limit in any week. The number of these covered by the home responsibilities protection scheme is not known but those who satisfy the normal conditions for caring have access to the scheme.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Young People)

15. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many young people under the age of 18 years are currently serving in Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Hanley: As at 1 July 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 3,334 young people under the age of 18 serving in the armed forces.

"Front Line First"

16. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of his "Front Line First" policy for (a) 24 Air Mobile Brigade and (b) the Army garrison at Colchester.

Mr. Hanley: As we have said previously, we hope to make an announcement about the broad outcome of the "Front Line First" studies before the summer recess.

My hon. Friend will be pleased to know that as part of the additional front-line manpower for the Army announced in December last year we intend to make available an additional battery of 83 men for the 24 Airmobile Brigade Artillery regiment.

Defence Exports

17. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on defence exports.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to report that 1993 was another record year, with British defence equipment manufacturers winning export orders worth £6,600 million. This maintains the United Kingdom's position as the world's second largest supplier of defence equipment.

22. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the contribution of defence industries to British exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: 1993 was another record year for British defence equipment manufacturers who won export orders worth £6,600 million. This represents 5·45 per cent. of total British exports in 1993.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

18. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart in respect of the deployment of military forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Mr. Rifkind: I have regular discussions with my French counterpart on a wide range of issues of mutual interest, including the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Trident

19. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the most up-to-date estimates of the capital cost of completing the Trident missile programme and maintaining it thereafter.

Mr. Aitken: At the end of December 1993, some £7 billion had been spent on the Trident programme out of a total of some £9·9 billion, with future estimated capital expenditure expressed at current economic conditions. Operating costs over the lifetime of Trident are expected to amount to some £6 billion on the same basis. The latter figure includes the costs of manpower, submarine refits, transport, stores, an appropriate element of the costs of the Clyde submarine base and the atomic weapons establishment and the eventual decommissioning of the submarines.

Hercules (Replacement)

20. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the replacement of the Hercules.

Mr. Aitken: We plan to replace or refurbish about half the Hercules fleet on a rolling basis by the end of the century. The balance of the Hercules fleet will be considered later, alongside the possible replacement of other RAF transport aircraft.

Peace Dividend

21. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made as to the extent of to which the peace dividend has now been exhausted.

Mr. Hanley: "Peace dividend" is not a term that my Department uses, because peace itself is a dividend from a continuous investment of national and international resources. In the face of continuing uncertainty in the strategic setting, the Government's security and defence policies aim both to meet existing and future challenges in the most effective way possible, and to make a suitable contribution to peace and stability worldwide, with the purpose of maintaining the freedom and territorial integrity of the United Kingdom and its dependent territories and its ability to pursue legitimate interests at home and abroad. The proportion of national resources which will be required to meet these goals cannot be predicted absolutely. On present plans, defence expenditure is expected to be about 2·9 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1996-97.

Defence Costs Study

23. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what closures of Ministry of Defence sites in the midlands the defence costs study is considering.

Mr. Aitken: A number of recommendations have emerged from the defence costs study for the rationalisation of various defence sites throughout the country. These are still under consideration by Ministers. Until final decisions are taken it would be premature for me to comment on the detail of the options under consideration.

Procurement

24. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to conduct a review of his Department's procurement plans.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's procurement plans are kept under review to ensure that they will continue to sustain cost-effectively the military capabilities that our policies require.

Contractorisation

25. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the contractorisation programme in the armed services.

Mr. Aitken: Following the issue in 1991 of the Government's White Paper, "Competing for Quality", we have a programme to pursue market-testing opportunities worth £1·2 billion in the four years from April 1992 across the whole range of defence activities. The aim of the programme is to test the efficiency of in-house services and functions against competition from industry, thereby maximising value for money for the defence budget and the taxpayer. The recent defence costs study will inevitably have a significant impact on the scale of our future "Competing for Quality" programme, and decisions on the contents of the programme will be taken in the light of the outcome of the study.

Hydrographical Surveys

26. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of hydrographic surveys is undertaken by the Royal Navy's marine surveying section.

Mr. Hanley: About two thirds of the civil programme of nautical charting hydrographic surveys in national waters is carried out by Royal Navy personnel embarked in ships of the Hydrographic Surveying Squadron or in chartered vessels. The Navy has only limited involvement in hydrographic surveys outside national waters.

Contracts

27. Mr. Ames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of United Kingdom defence contracts have been awarded to United Kingdom companies in the past 12 months.

Mr. Aitken: United Kingdom-based companies have been awarded some 90 per cent., by value, of the direct contracts placed by my Department in the last 12 months.

Ten Tors Competition

28. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the manning levels of the Regular Army and the Territorial Army in the 10 tors competition held on Saturday 14 May on Dartmoor.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 74 Regular Army personnel and 289 members of the Territorial Army took part in the 10 tors competition on 14 May.

Merchant Vessels

29. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many merchant vessels are currently available to the United Kingdom for defence purposes.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Davies) earlier today.

Territorial Army

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the deployment of formed Territorial Army units to the Falklands or other overseas theatres.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 19 April at column 508 our intention to deploy a Territorial Army platoon in support of the Regular Army in the Falkland Islands from July to November this year, and a Territorial Army company as part of the Falkland Islands garrison from March to July next year. We shall consider further developments in the light of this trial. The 40 TA personnel deploying next month are drawn from across the Province, and come from 4/5 Royal Irish Rangers and 152 Ambulance Regiment RLC.

Defence Procurement Executive

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the list kept by the Defence Procurement Executive of approved persons or companies in the United Kingdom to whom surplus military equipment may be disposed.

Mr. Aitken: More than 4,000 companies and individuals encompassing more than 250 commodity types are currently registered on the Directorate of Sales (Disposals) trade lists. The information is commercial in confidence and can be released only with permission of the tenderers concerned.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries to which surplus military equipment has been disposed by the Defence Procurement Executive in the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could not be provided without disproportionate effort. However, overseas sales of surplus military equipment by the Ministry of Defence are subject to the same defence and foreign policy considerations as all other exports of defence equipment.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used for the disposal of surplus military equipment by the Defence Procurement Executive.

Mr. Aitken: Surplus military equipment is sold by the Directorate of Sales (Disposals) to the best financial advantage of the Ministry of Defence, in compliance with Government policies and control procedures.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons and at what grades or ranks work in the Defence Procurement Executive.

Mr. Aitken: The available information, relating to staff working in Chief of Defence Procurement's budget area at 1 April 1994, is as follows:

Royal Air Force

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what he expects the level of manpower in the Royal Air Force to be in 1999.

Mr. Hanley: Detailed manpower requirements in five years' time will depend on a number of factors, including changing commitments, developments in technology and the progress of management initiatives such as market testing. The Royal Air Force estimates, however, that once restructuring following the "Options for Change" review has been completed, its broad requirement for manpower will be 64,500, which assumes 4,500 in initial training. The precise number in initial training will depend upon recruiting and outflow at the time.

These figures reflect decisions already taken. They do not take account of any changes in manpower which may arise as a result of the defence costs study.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals his Department has to fit flight data recorders or cockpit voice recorders to Chinook helicopters; and what would be the costs involved in purchasing and fitting flight data recorders and cockpit voice recorder equipment.

Mr. Aitken: A programme to fit a health and usage monitoring system which incorporates an accident data recorder and a cockpit voice recorder is planned to start in 1997. We expect to issue, next year, an invitation to tender for the supply of this equipment, at which time industry will be asked to provide costed proposals.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals his Department has to fit ground proximity warning systems to Chinook helicopters; and what would be the cost of fitting and purchasing such equipment.

Mr. Aitken: There are no current proposals or costings available to equip Chinook with a ground proximity warning system. All RAF Chinooks are, however, fitted with radar altimeters.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings were held by Ministers, serving officers and officials with General Pinochet during his recent visit to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Officers (Cooks)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) Official Report, column 534, what is the annual cost for each service of providing cooks for serving officers.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Peacekeeping Operations

Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to visit Brussels to meet his NATO counterparts in order to discuss future peacekeeping operations.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence plans to visit Brussels to speak to his NATO counterparts at the Defence Planning Committee meeting in December. The agenda for that meeting has not yet been decided.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under which section of the Official Secrets Act 1989 he withholds data on energy efficiency within his responsibility.

Mr. Hanley: It is not my Department's policy to withhold data on energy efficiency. Because of the major organisational changes in the Department in recent years, however, it was not possible to provide full sets of figures in time for the first two editions of the Department of the Environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance". The 1994 edition will, however, have details for each year of the current Government campaign, for each of the three services, and we hope to be able to give complete data in the subsequent edition.

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Hanley: No specific instructions are issued to security staff in my Department's London buildings for dealing with those sleeping rough and beggars, but in the light of the continuing terrorist threat it is our policy to ensure that perimeters of buildings are kept clear at all times. Records are not maintained of specific incidents, but it is the policy of my Department's security staff to seek the assistance of the police where there is a problem.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 306, what was the conclusion of the discussions on the 1980s United States plans to update their offensive chemical capability; and what were the factors behind reaching this conclusion.

Mr. Hanley: Throughout the discussions in question, the United Kingdom placed the highest priority on the negotiation of a verifiable and comprehensive worldwide ban on chemical weapons. However, faced with the Soviet Union's formidable offensive capability in chemical warfare and its persistent refusal to accept adequate verification measures to permit such a ban, the United Kingdom supported the USA's moves to modernise its limited retaliatory chemical capability. This modernisation was adopted by NATO as a force goal but was subsequently cancelled by the United States in 1991. As was stated at the time, this underlined to the Soviet Union the benefits of an early agreement on a negotiated ban.

This ban is now in sight in the form of the chemical weapons convention which opened for signature in January 1993.

Suez

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the campaign, gallantry or other medals available to ex-service people who served during the Suez emergency in Egypt.

Mr. Hanley: One day's service in the Suez emergency in Egypt between 31 October 1956 and 22 December 1956 qualified for the award of the clasp "Near East" to the Naval General Service Medal or the General Service Medal 1918 Army and RAF. Between the above dates, naval personnel serving in ships engaged in operations off the Egyptian coast, and aircrew who completed one sortie over the operational land area in Egypt, also qualified for the clasp "Near East".

Service personnel who served during that emergency could also be considered for awards in respect of gallant and distinguished services. A list of those personnel granted awards was published in the London Gazette supplement of 13 June 1957.

WALES

Church Repairs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken to fulfil his departmental commitment to discuss with Church authorities in Wales the need for repair grants arising from damage caused by atmospheric polluters.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cadw has held discussions with Church authorities in Wales about support for general repairs to cathedrals. In my reply of 16 March to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards), Official Report, column 698, I announced that over the next three financial years £675,000 will be set aside towards the restoration costs faced by Welsh cathedrals. This is additional to and separate from existing support for repairs to historic religious buildings, which totalled £557,331 in 1993-94.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the number of salaried dentists employed in each family health services authority area on 24 March, together with the number of community dentists employed within the same areas;

(2) what was the number of (a) general dental practitioners practising, (b) general dental practitioners' practices, (c) community dental practitioners and (d) salaried dental practitioners for each family health services authority area for each year since 1984; and if he will also explain these figures per 1,000 of the population resident in each FHSA area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information relating to general dental practitioners and community dental staff is given in the table. Information relating to community dental staff is collected annually as at 30 September. Therefore, no information relating to 24 March is available centrally.

The table also gives the number of salaried dentists in post at 30 September 1993 and 30 April 1994 respectively. No salaried dentists were employed prior to 1993. The table includes one dentist, in Powys, who was not in post on 24 March 1994.

No information is held centrally on the number of general dental practitioners' practices.

Medical and Surgical Negligence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds his Department has available for statutory or non-statutory contingent liabilities for claims of medical or surgical negligence when liability may be split between two NHS hospital trusts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The excess costs above £30,000 of successful claims arising from clinical negligence are met from a pool, administered by the Welsh Office, which has a present provision of £3,000,000.

Where liability is split between NHS trusts, it is a matter for local determination how the first £30,000 of such a claim is met.

Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff are employed by the Royal Commission on ancient and historical monuments (Wales); and what is their average annual salary.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments (Wales) has 34·5 full-time equivalent staff in post. Their average annual salary is £23,555.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance that he issues to GP fundholding practices on the insurance cover that they should carry for claims of negligence made for the placing of inappropriate contracts.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no intention to issue guidance to GP fundholders on the insurance cover that they should carry. All general practitioners are responsible for making their own arrangements to cover insurance risks.

A-level Results

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on A-level results achieved in (a) Welsh colleges and (b) Welsh secondary school sixth forms in 1993.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on A-level pass rates is not immediately available by type of institution, but it will be possible to provide it before the end of the year.

As soon as the data are to hand, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales asked for grant-maintained status in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Seven schools applied for grant-maintained status in 1993. There have been no applications in 1994 to date.

Cwmcarn Grant-maintained School

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when Cwmcarn grant-maintained school applied to establish a sixth form; and what was the result of this application.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have not received an application from the school to establish a sixth form. I understand, however, that the school is currently consulting on proposals for a change of character as required by section 96 of the Education Act 1993.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received on the number of employees in each NHS trust who would lose their jobs following the implementation of the current pay award.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is impossible to say to what extent any speculative figures for job losses in the trusts are directly attributable to the cost of pay awards.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had regarding the payment of salary to the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency by any other method other than pay-as-you-earn.

Mr. Redwood: None.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No formal instructions are given to security staff for dealing with those sleeping rough in departmental doorways or beggars in the vicinity. It is, however, normal practice for security staff to ask those sleeping rough in departmental doorways to move at the start of the working day if they have not already done so. No problems with either category have been reported within the last three months.

Katyn

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will now review the withholding of eight of the 762 entered papers on files FO 371/34563-90, following the information about Katyn made available by the Russian Government on 14 October 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Seven papers relating to Katyn were released to the Public Record Office in 1993. These were:

FO 371/34590 (1943)
FO 371/39385 (1944)
FO 371/39421 (1944)
FO 371/77476 (1949)
FO 371/100719 (1952)

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is currently reviewing all other papers withheld on files 371/34563-89, only one of which appears to relate to the Katyn massacre. I shall let my hon. Friend know the outcome of the review in due course.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prescriptions for benzodiazepine drugs have been issued by the Department of Health and Social Services in the past 10 years.

Mr. Ancram: Some 7,995,602 prescriptions for benzodiazepine drugs were issued by general practitioners in Northern Ireland between 1983 and 1993.

Government Offices (Union Flag)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a flag pole has been provided at the premises of the roads service of the Department of the Environment in Armagh city; whether a Union flag has been supplied to these premises; whether advice has been given about the recognised days on which the Union flag is flown at Government offices; why the Union flag was not flown on the official birthday of Her Majesty the Queen at these premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: Both a flag pole and a Union flag are provided at the Department of the Environment's roads service premises in Armagh city. Advice is usually given about the recognised days on which the Union flag is flown at Government offices but, owing to an administrative error, the date of the Queen's official birthday was not notified this year. Steps have been taken to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a flag pole has been provided at the premises of the water service at the Department of the Environment in Armagh city; whether a Union flag has been supplied to these premises; whether advice has been given about the recognised days on which the Union flag is to be flown at Government offices; why the Union flag was not flown on the official birthday of Her Majesty the Queen at these premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: Neither a flag pole nor a Union flag has been provided at the Department of the Environment's water executive sub-divisional depot at 15 Ardmore road, Armagh. Provision will be made as soon as possible to enable a Union flag to be flown at this building.

Waste Paper Recycling

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to provide for payments to voluntary groups to collect waste paper for recycling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Government have no plans to provide for payments to voluntary groups to collect waste paper for recycling. New waste legislation is being prepared, which will introduce to Northern Ireland provisions similar to those contained in part 2 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, including a recycling credit scheme.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sites have been identified in the constituency of South Down for the purposes of industrial development by the Industrial Development Board from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1994; and which are they.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Industrial Development Board's industrial estates at Killough road in Downpatrick and at Milltown in Warrenpoint have been available for industrial development since 1984.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by the Industrial Development Board on the indentification of sites for industrial development in South Down.

Mr. Tim Smith: A 6-acre site has been identified at the racecourse on Ballydugan road in Downpatrick. A search for other possible locations has resulted in four sites being identified and a report on their suitability for industrial development is expected at the end of July.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs were created by the Industrial Development Board from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1994; how many of these were the result of inward investment contracts; and what are the location of these jobs.

Mr. Tim Smith: Information on job creations is not available in the manner requested or by location. However, details of jobs promoted by the Industrial Development Board over the last 10 years are available by district council area and are set out in the table. The Industrial Development Board's own research shows that companies create approximately two thirds of all promoted jobs over a period of three to five years after acceptance of the Industrial Development Board's offer of assistance.

House Sales, Ards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the income from the sale of houses for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the borough of Ards for the years 1993-94 and 1992-93; and how much of this income was reinvested in the borough of Ards in each of those two years.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but its chief executive has advised me that income from the house sales scheme in the borough of Ards was £1·335 million for 1992-93 and £1·398 million for 1993-94. The Housing Executive's investment in the borough of Ards on new build was £1·919 million in 1992-93 and £1·659 million in 1993-94.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total capital expenditure for minor and major works for each college of further education in Northern Ireland during each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the colleges' total capital expenditure for each financial year from 1989 to 1992 is analysed by area in the "Statements and Summary of the Education and Library Boards' Accounts"—Cmnds. 1531, 1977 and 2249—copies of which are available in the Library.

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been created by the Local Enterprise Development Unit from 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1994; if he will list the locations of these jobs; and how many of these jobs still exist.

Mr. Tim Smith: Up to 1990-91 the principal measure of LEDU performance was job promotions. The job promotion figures for 1984-85 to 1990-91 by regional area are as follows:

Area	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
North	672	799	653	903	675	839	775

TOTAL	4,009	3,888	4,201	4,047	4,395	5,221	5,501

Since 1991-92 LEDU has identified net employment change within all LEDU client companies. These figures are not available on a regional basis.

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Jobs Created	1,750	2,630	2,870
Jobs Lost due to Closures	2,400	1,610	1,530
Net Employment Change	-650	1,020	1,340

It is not possible to say how many jobs created by LEDU in a given year and location are still in existence.

Red Squirrels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by county the current estimate of the red squirrel population; what were the figures (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: No estimate of the red squirrel population of Northern Ireland has been made. I counted five when I visited Belvoir forest park on 23 March. Support for the population of red squirrels includes full protection under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.

PRIME MINISTER

State Property

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list by date and item for the last 48 months when an item from the state property inventories maintained at No. 10 Downing street was discovered to have been missing; whether each item found to be missing was discovered by the Cabinet Office internal auditors or by one of his officials responsible for making periodic checks of the inventory; and if he will list those items that have now been traced, and where they were discovered.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, no item from the state property inventories has been discovered missing within the stated period.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus EC Food

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the production, distribution and transportation of the surplus EC food currently being distributed; the quantities and costs involved in the current year; and what his projections are for the changes and trends in the system next year and in subsequent years.

Mr. Jack: In 1994, the European Commission allocated 175 mecu—£136 million—to member states under the EC surplus food scheme which is fully financed by the Community. The United Kingdom received 29 mecu—£23 million—for the release from invervention stores of 6,840 tonnes of beef, its transportation to processors, processing into canned stewed steak and its distribution to designated organisations. Certain administrative costs of these organisations are also reimbursed. The transportation of the produce to organisations for distribution to about 1·6 million eligible recipients should be completed by the end of July. Copies of leaflets LP45 and LP46, which describe the scheme rules, are available in the Library of the House.

The European Commission is responsible for allocating funds to member states and for approving their plans for operating this scheme. It does so for one year in advance only. For 1995, the United Kingdom's current plan is to maintain the present arrangements, but I shall be making an announcement about this later in the year.

Animal Exports

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will urge the European Commission to adopt a maximum eight-hour limit on slaughter journeys, and prohibit the export of farm animals to non-EU countries which do not comply with EU welfare standards during transport and at slaughter;

(2) if she will support a maximum journey time for animals when the transport directive is decided upon.

Mr. Soames: At this week's Agriculture Council, the United Kingdom withheld support for a revised package of proposals on the welfare of animals during transport. We have obtained a commitment from the Commission that it will bring forward further proposals on journey limits by 1 July 1995.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations exist regarding milk produced by cows known to be infected with the bovine immunodeficiency virus.

Mr. Soames: All milk for human consumption must meet the requirements of the Milk and Dairies (General) Regulations 1959 and the Milk (Special Designations) Regulations 1989 made under the Food Safety Act 1990. Animal feed containing milk or milk products must meet the requirements of the Agriculture Act 1970 and the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1991, as amended. Neither the Acts nor the regulations refer to bovine immunodeficiency-like virus.

Chickens

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what have been the losses in each of the last five years from (a) chicken cancer and (b) Mareks disease in chickens, and other herpes-based diseases.

Mr. Soames: These diseases are not notifiable and therefore no comprehensive data is maintained.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) of 18 April, Official Report, column 415, which interested parties he has so far consulted and which he intends to consult regarding the future of the state veterinary service.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend will consult interested parties shortly. The consultation documents will be placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Court Escort Services

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conditions were specified in respect of the number of employees to be employed for the first phase of the contract in the contract with Securicor for carrying out court escort services in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the court escort and custody service contract in the Metropolitan Police area.

There were no conditions relating specifically to the number of employees to be employed by Securicor Custodial Services Limited for the first phase of their contract to carry out court escort services in the Metropolitan Police area. Securicor were required, however, to employ sufficient numbers to staff adequately all courts in the contract area thereby enabling the courts to function effectively. They were also required to employ sufficient staff to escort safely all those who were required at courts.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conditions were specified in respect of pay and terms of service of employees in the contract with Securicor for carrying out court escort services in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the court escort and custody service contract in the Metropolitan Police area.

There were no conditions specific to the pay and terms of service of employees in the contract with Securicor Custodial Services Limited for carrying out court escort services in the Metropolitan Police area.

Securicor are responsible for the recruitment, selection, training, and pay and terms of service for all their personnel. Recruitment policy and procedures must however be approved by the Prison Service. The Prison Service must be satisfied that the level of pay and the terms of service are sufficiently attractive to enable Securicor Custodial Services Limited to recruit and retain high calibre staff.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which companies tendered for the contract to carry out court escort services in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the companies that tendered for the contract to carry out court escort services in the Metropolitan Police area.

Tenders were received on 30 September 1993 from the following four companies: Securicor Custodial Services Limited; Reliance Custodial Services; Group 4 Court Services and Pinkerton Court Escort Services Limited.

After carefully considering the proposals, the Prisons Board decided to award the contract to Securicor Custodial Services Limited.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the value of the contract awarded to Securicor for court escort services in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the value of the contract awarded to Securicor for court escort services in the Metropolitan Police area.

The contract is valued at £96 million and will run for five years.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is currently given to prison officers escorting prisoners to court; what is the duration of that training; and what training, of what duration, will be given to employees of private security firms engaged in this work from 27 June in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the court escort and custody service contract in the Metropolitan Police area.

All newly recruited prison officers receive specific training in court escort duties as part of their nine weeks induction course. The training comprises six sessions of 45 minutes each and covers relevant court and Prison Service procedures. Many other aspects of the induction course are also relevant to escort duties, including a range of training in interpersonal skills and general security procedures such as searching, handcuffing, and use of the closeting chain.

Securicor are required by the contract to train all their custodial staff to prepare them for certification and employment as Prisoner Custody Officers carrying out prisoner escort duties and as Prisoner Custody Officers performing custodial duties at a contracted out prison.

The training consists of five modules which cover the following subjects: the legal framework; prisoner management; security; supervision and control; general. This training totals 234 hours.

All training must be approved by, and completed to the satisfaction of the Prison Service.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks his Department has made for criminal records of the employees of Securicor who will be carrying out court escort services in the Metropolitan police area as of 27 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the checks made for criminal records of the employees of Securicor who will be carrying out court escort services in the Metropolitan Police area.

All people who work at contracted out prisons and for the contracted court escort service are subject to routine enquiries about their suitability to work with prisoners. These enquiries are similar to those made in relation to applicants for Prison Service employment. Candidates who apply for employment, either in the public or the private sector of the Prison Service, in custodial duties or escort functions are exempted from the provisions of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 by the Rehabilitation Act 1974 (Exceptions) Order 1975, and therefore convictions which ordinarily are regarded as "spent" are taken into account.

Probation and Bail Hostels

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of places in probation and bail hostels covering the Greater London area at 1 April.

Mr. Maclean: As at 1 April, there were a total of 343 approved hostel places in the Greater London area, comprising the inner-London, north-east, south-east and south-west London and Middlesex probation services.

Deportation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions to make a deportation order have been taken in each of the past five years either under section 3(5)(a) or section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971 where the person to be deported had made known to the Secretary of State the existence of his or her British citizen children.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remand

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1990 (a) the percentage of prisoners who are on remand for three months and over who are subsequently brought to trial, (b) the percentage of those on remand for three months and over who are brought to trial who are found not guilty and (c) of those brought to trial, found guilty and sentenced to a prison term, the percentage who have already served as long or longer on remand.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available.

Immigration (EEA Nationals)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific amount of capital or income has been set by the immigration and nationality department to satisfy the Department of a European economic area national's entitlement to residence under Council directive 90/364 EEC.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific amounts are set, but in general we expect an applicant to have a sufficient level of income or capital to exceed the limits at which income support could be claimed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision is made under the Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994 or elsewhere to give effect to Council directive 75/34 article 5, which says that a retired self-employed citizen of the Union must be permitted a period of two years from the date on which he or she becomes entitled to the right of residence to exercise the right, even if the person has spent those two years outside the country.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Article 6 of the draft Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994 provides that a self-employed person who has ceased economic activity in the United Kingdom within the terms of Council directive 75/34/EEC is qualified to reside in the United Kingdom. No time limit is imposed within which this right must be exercised.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence of sickness insurance in respect of all risks the immigration and nationality department has determined to be appropriate for the purposes of Council directive 90/364 EEC.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This requirement is not applied at present.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of the European Union have been issued letters in each of the past five years advising them that their presence in the United Kingdom is no longer lawful on the ground that the person is not or is no longer exercising a treaty right; and how many of those decisions were subsequently executed in each of the past five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is available for only part of the period requested. Between September 1992 and December 1992, 27 letters were issued to European Community nationals advising them that, because they were not in employment and had insufficient resources to avoid becoming a burden on public funds, they were not exercising a right of residence under European Community law and accordingly should make arrangements to leave the United Kingdom. In 1993, 180 such letters were issued. Since 1 January 1994, when EC rights of residence were extended to the European economic area, 563 such letters have been issued to EEA nationals. The Benefits Agency is informed so that it can cease payment of any income support, but it is not known how many of those concerned subsequently left the country.

Road Schemes (Protests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total costs of policing for protests regarding (a) the M11 link road, (b) Twyford Down and (c) the Swainswick and Batheaston bypass; and what additional funds have been made to the forces concerned.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Debts (Non-Payment)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men and how many women have been imprisoned for non-payment of television licence fees in each of the last five years, giving the average amount of debt unpaid by these offenders.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is for 1991-93 and is given in the table. No information is available for the period before 1991 because the offence of non-payment of fines for using a television without a licence was not separately identified in the prison statistics. No information is available centrally regarding the amount of debt outstanding.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 20 courts passing the largest number of custodial sentences in respect of the non-payment of debts for the latest period of 12 months for which there is information, specifying in addition how many of these sentences were for non-payment of (a) television licences and (b) community charge.

Mr. Maclean: I regret that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Urban Areas (Policing)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the formula for calculating areas of urban population for policing purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A new needs-based formula is currently being developed to inform the allocation of resources between police authorities. The definition of urban areas is being considered in that context.

Deportations

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been made in the last year for which figures are available of excessive force during deportations; and how many of these complaints were (a) about immigration officers and (b) about employees of private security firms.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During the 12 months to 31 May 1994, complaints of this nature were made in four cases. All related to employees of private security firms, and all were found to be unsubstantiated.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to date of implementing the Dangerous Dogs Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the cost to the police, local authorities, the Crown Prosecution Service and the courts of implementing the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 is not held centrally.

Life Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners at present serving a life sentence in prisons in England and Wales had their sentence reviewed by the Life Sentence Review Board during 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1993, the Parole Board considered 680 life sentence cases for release. I regret that information on the split between male and female cases is not readily available.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the amount of money paid to United Kingdom Detention Services for (a) start-up costs and (b) phase-in costs under the contract to run Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the amount of money paid to United Kingdom Detention Services.

The payments for start up costs were £3·3 million excluding VAT, and the payments for phase in costs were £4·5 million excluding VAT.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the amount of money paid to United Kingdom Detention Services for operating costs under the contract to run Blakenhurst prison during its first year of operation; and if this sum included the amounts paid for start-up and phase-in costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 22 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the amount of money paid to United Kingdom

Detention Services for operating costs under the contract to run Blakenhurst Prison during its first year of operation; and if this sum included the amounts paid for start up and phase in costs.

The amount of money paid in the first year of operation was £9·4 million excluding VAT.

This sum does not include the start up costs which were paid before the prison commenced operation. However, it does include the phase in costs which related to the period during which the population of the prison grew to 95 per cent. of the certified normal accommodation. This point was reached in November 1993.

European Elections

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the turnout across the United Kingdom in the recent European elections; and what was the comparable figure in each of the other member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of electors and the number of valid votes counted in the United Kingdom will be included in a Home Office statistical bulletin. Information about the number of people voting in other member states is not held centrally and I will write to the hon. Member once I have the available information.

Travel Documents

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) British visitor passports and (b) British excursion documents were issued last year; and what was the cost in each case;

(2) what plans he has to abolish the British visitor passport and British excursion document;

(3) what plans he has to consult relevant organisations about the future of the British visitors passport and the British excursion document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1988, the Home Affairs Select Committee recommended that urgent consideration should be given to the withdrawal of the British visitor's passport as soon as the computerisation of the passport issuing process was fully operational. This position has now been reached and in September 1993 the United Kingdom Passport Agency began a review of the suitability of the British visitor's passport and the British excursion document as alternatives to the standard passport for travel abroad. The review is considering document security, international acceptability, customer choice and convenience, and other relevant factors. About 1,972,800 British visitor's passports, and 249,000 British excursion documents were issued in 1993-94 at a cost of £12 and £3 respectively.

The Passport Agency has consulted widely on the review, and detailed responses have been received from travel agents, tour operators, transport and shipping associations, consumer groups and interested organisations within Government. The Passport Agency will be reporting its findings to me in the next few months, when a decision will be taken.

Animal Testing

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the guidance on eye irritation tests.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The guidelines issued in 1987 have been reviewed by the animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate and my right hon. and learned Friend has agreed that revised guidelines should be issued to establishments where such testing is carried out. The guidelines have been endorsed by the Animal Procedures Committee. Copies of the guidelines have been placed in the Library.

The revised guidelines aim to promote best practice in order to keep to the minimum any suffering involved to animals used for eye irritation tests while enabling the requirements of regulatory authorities for such testing to be satisfied.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Switzerland

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Switzerland's relations with the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Switzerland has long-standing close links with the European Union. Following the Swiss referendum rejecting European Economic Area membership, the European Union agreed in principle in November 1993 to start negotiations with Switzerland on a number of new bilateral agreements. The Swiss referendum vote in February in favour of a ban from 2004 on lorries transiting the Alps has so far prevented agreement on a mandate for road transport negotiations. But the May Foreign Affairs Council asked the Commission to bring forward mandates in other priority areas and to obtain clarification of the transit ban, so that transport mandates could be adopted. The United Kingdom has pressed for negotiations to open quickly.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) of 19 April, Official Report, column 446, what precise steps are being taken to encourage India and Pakistan's accession to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to urge India and Pakistan to accede to the non-proliferation treaty at every appropriate opportunity both in our bilateral contacts and in multilateral forums. We are also supportive of all efforts to improve confidence and security in the region which we believe will help to create an environment in which accession to the NPT by these two countries will become more likely.

North Korea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments concerning the verification of North Korea's nuclear facilities; and what action he is proposing to take.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: North Korea's continued non-compliance with its safeguards agreement is a cause of great concern. North Korea recently completed the removal of all the used fuel rods from its 5 MW nuclear reactor without allowing the International Atomic Energy Agency to verify independently where different rods had been located in the reactor, which prevented the agency from verifying whether plutonium had previously been diverted from the reactor. A further worrying development is North Korea's decision to withdraw from the IAEA, though this does not affect the legality of their safeguards obligations. Action, including possible sanctions, is now being considered by the United Nations Security Council.

Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of which countries appear to be supportive of each of the two sides in the Yemeni conflict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Those countries that have issued statements about the crisis in Yemen have, as far as we are aware, supported neither one side nor the other. United Nations Security Council resolution 924, calling for an immediate ceasefire and dialogue to end the crisis, has received widespread support.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what practical action is being proposed to enforce the United Nations embargo on arms supplies to both sides in the Yemeni war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council resolution 924 urged countries to cease the supply of arms and other materials to Yemen. No action is necessary in respect of direct exports from the United Kingdom since all military exports are already licensable. No licences have been issued for military equipment for the Yemen since this resolution was passed.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether Iraq is militarily supporting north Yemen in the Yemeni war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no reliable information about Iraq's involvement in Yemen.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of which British commercial interests both in and outside Yemen are put at risk by the Yemeni conflict.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Plans by several British companies to assist the Republic of Yemen in refurbishing its infrastructure and developing its natural resources have been set back by the current conflict. For example, it was hoped that a major British company would be awarded a contract to help redevelop the oil refinery outside Aden, which has been hit by air raids. Additionally, a British consortium planning the expansion of Mukalla port and power generation has had to postpone its plans.

Cyprus

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he fully supports the United Nations Secretary-General's report on Cyprus; and whether he endorses the Secretary-General's criticism of the lack of political will by the Turkish side to promote a solution to the Cyprus issue.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Nations Secretary-General's report of 30 May was an accurate reflection of the situation at the time. There appears to have been some progress since then. We await a further report by the United Nations Secretary-General.

Occupied Territories

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions he has made to the initial installation of a Palestinian administration in the former occupied territories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have contributed £1·3 million to the World bank's trust fund for technical assistance and are contributing through the EC to the start-up costs of the new Palestinian Administration, and of the police in particular. Bilaterally, we have assisted the Administration with expert legal advice on the drafting of the Basic Law and with police training and equipment. We are providing assistance in the financial sector, including Bank of England assistance with the establishment of a central monetary authority, to the Palestinian Economic Council for Development and Reconstruction, and with the legal infrastructure in Gaza. We will also provide help in organising and monitoring the elections.

Iran

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the reasons given by the Iranian Government for the expulsion of a British diplomat from the British embassy in Teheran; and what was his response to this action.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iranian Government are reported as having claimed that Mr. Cowell, the British diplomat expelled from Iran, was involved in actions and behaviour contrary to diplomatic norms and had connections with terrorist groups in Iran. We have made it clear to the Iranians that these allegations are completely unjustified. In our view, Mr. Cowell's withdrawal was a tit-for-tat reaction to the removal of an Iranian first secretary in London in connection with attempts by members of the Iranian embassy to distribute forged documents.

European Union

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the last 10 years the United Kingdom has used its veto in meetings of the Council of Ministers and other EU ministerial groupings.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom can always ensure that its concerns are taken fully into account where the treaty requires unanimous voting. As votes are not normally taken in these circumstances, it is not possible to quantify the number of occasions over the past decade on which we have used the requirement for unanimity in order to insist on a particular outcome.

Israel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent developments there have been in Israel-Jordan relationships; and what is his policy on them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Israel and Jordan have agreed to set up a bilateral commission to discuss water, environment, boundaries and security that will meet in the region in July. We welcome this, and hope there will be further progress on all tracks towards a just, lasting and comprehensive peace settlement.

Malaysia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been in changing the Malaysian Government's policy of not awarding Government contracts to British firms.

Mr. Goodlad: We have been working hard to restore full trade relations with Malaysia and have remained in close touch with the Malaysian Government. The Malaysians have recently said that the embargo is under review, but have not told us when it will be lifted.

Caspian Sea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to him by the Russian Government concerning a British-Azerbaijani memorandum signed in February on oil and gas projects in the Caspian sea.

Mr. Hogg: The Governments of the United Kingdom and Azerbaijan signed a memorandum of understanding on energy co-operation in February 1994 which made reference to the Azerbaijani sector of the Caspian sea. The Government of the Russian Federation subsequently transmitted to Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow a note setting out their views on the legal status of the Caspian sea.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Governments have now committed forces to the United Nations peacekeeping force in Rwanda; and when it is expected that these forces will be in place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ghana, Senegal, Ethiopia, Zimbabwe, Nigeria, Congo and Mali have all responded positively to the United Nations Secretary-General's appeal for troops to agument the United Nations aid mission in Rwanda. It is expected that the first of these troops will be able to be deployed in early July.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what logistical support the United Kingdom Government have committed to the peacekeeping force in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has offered the United Nations 50 4-tonne four-wheel-drive vehicles for use by the United Nations peacekeeping force in Rwanda.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 13 and 14 June.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 13 and 14 June in Luxembourg.

The presidency briefed the Council on its plans for the European Council in Corfu on 24 and 25 June. Growth, competitiveness and unemployment would be the lead items. Other subjects would include the next President of the Commission, Mediterranean issues, aspects of the common foreign and security policy and a formal decision to set up the 1996 study group as agreed in March at the informal Foreign Ministers' meeting in Ioannina.

President Delors presented a progress report on follow-up action on the White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment. There was a general discussion on issues that would be raised under this item at Corfu.

The Council discussed relations with Ukraine, in particular proposals for assistance in the fields of nuclear safety and agriculture.

The EC and its member states and Ukraine also signed a partnership and co-operation agreement, with President Kravchuk signing for Ukraine. In addition, the Council approved a negotiating mandate for an EC/Ukraine interim agreement on trade matters.

The Council agreed that the EC-Russia partnership and co-operation agreement could be signed in Corfu, subject to Russian confirmation of the lifting of certain restrictions on the operations of European Union banks in Russia.

The Council welcomed the ad referendum agreement by both the Muslim and Croat Mostar delegations to the memorandum of understanding defining the role of the European Union administrator who would shortly take over the administration of the city. The Council also discussed how best to develop its relationship with Croatia, and to encourage continued Croatian co-operation with the peace process.

The European Union observer for Cyprus reported to the Council on recent developments in the United Nation's efforts towards implementation of the Secretary-General's package of confidence-building measures. The Council noted that, in spite of the unhelpful Turkish Cypriot attitude until recently, a last effort was being made to secure agreement, and that the United Nations Secretary-General would be reporting to the Security Council again soon. The Council agreed to continue to monitor the situation and to discuss it again at Corfu.

The Council agreed mandates for the negotiation of new financial protocols with Cyprus and Malta.

The Commission presented a paper on the EU-Mercosur relationship. After discussion, it agreed to produce a further paper on options for developing this relationship. The issue will be discussed further under the German presidency.

Ministers agreed to extend the common foreign and security policy joint action on the stability pact to cover the follow-up to the Paris launch conference. The documents agreed at the Paris conference will be transmitted to Corfu.

The Council noted a paper outlining the options available for financing costs arising from common foreign and security policy actions. It was agreed that these should be discussed with the incoming European Parliament and that further work should be undertaken on specific procedures.

The Council discussed a presidency compromise package designed to secure agreement to a regulation to create a common Community regime of export controls on dual use goods. The package was agreed by 10 member states including the United Kingdom but Denmark and Belgium asked for a little more time to reach a final decision.

The Council discussed a proposal to amend the existing regulation on outward processing trade—OPT—in textiles. The subject was referred for further work by experts, pending discussion at the July FAC. A number of delegations, including the United Kingdom, called for the Commission to make a separate proposal establishing duty exemption for OPT conducted with the countries of central and eastern Europe.

The Council appoved the imposition of a definitive anti-dumping duty on large aluminium electrolytic capacitors from South Korea and Taiwan. The United Kingdom made a statement opposing this proposal, expressing doubts about the injury case and concern for the effects of such high duties on users.

The Council agreed on a mandate for the Community to participate in negotiations on a convention to combat desertification, recommended by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992.

A co-operation council with Israel was held in the margins, attended by Mr. Shimon Peres, the Israeli Foreign Minister.

Because of shortage of time, the presidency deleted from the agenda the items dealing with aid to banana growers in the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries, shipbuilding, access to documents and other business, including imports from China. These will be taken at a future Council.

No votes were taken during the Council.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Science and Technology

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the importance of science and technology in the Government's White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win."

Mr. Waldegrave: The competitiveness White Paper reaffirms the message of the last year's White Paper, "Realising our Potential", Cm 2250—that science, engineering and technology make an essential contribution to national competitiveness.

Research Councils

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish his recent letter to chairmen of research councils setting out the inter-relationships between the chief executives and the director general of research councils.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have already done so. On 23 May I sent copies of the letter to the hon. Members for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) and for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) and to the Chairman of the Science and Technology Select Committee. A copy of the letter has also been placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of applications to his Department for projections of future state pension entitlement in the last year for which figures are available and the cost to public funds of this service.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the pension forecast service is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 21 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking about the Retirement Pension forecast service.

The Benefits Agency provides centralised services at DSS Longbenton, giving Retirement Pension (RP) forecasts and advice. One is for customers who are currently abroad or going to live abroad and is run by the Agency's Overseas Benefits Directorate. During the year ended March 1994, applications for forecasts totalling 26,142 were made to this service.

The main RP forecasting service, which is part of the Agency's Newcastle Pensions Directorate, serves customers living in the UK. In the year ended March 1994 this service received 476,339 applications for pension forecasts.

The combined running costs for these services are in the region of £1·5 million.

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants are registered at the Chesterfield, Buxton, Ilkeston, Derby—Beckett street—Derby—London road—and Sutton Benefits Agency offices as at March 1994; and how many at each of these were (a) income support claimants signing on as unemployed, (b) pensioners, (c) income support claimants receiving a lone-parent premium, (d) those receiving a disability premium, (e) those receiving a carer's premium and (f) those receiving a severe disability premium.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 21 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for statistics relating to Income Support claims administered by offices within your constituency area.

The complete range of information is not available in the format requested and could only be provided at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics relating to customers receiving a Carer Premium and or a Severe Disability Premium are only collated on a national basis. The latest information available for those recieving a Carer Premium is available in the Annual Statistical Enquiry (ASE) for May 1992. The latest information for those receiving a Severe Disability Premium is held in the Quarterly Statistical Enquiry (QSE) for August 1993. A copy of both are available in the Library.

Both of the above premiums can be awarded at the same time as other premiums.

I have attached a table showing pensioner customers, lone parent customers, unemployed customers and the number where the statistical information held on the Income Support Computer System (ISCS) shows that a Disability Premium has been awarded.

Guidance advises that wherever a Disability Premium has been awarded, the statistical symbol should be amended on the ISCS. However, there may be cases where the customer receives a Disability Premium in respect of a partner where this action has not been taken, therefore the figures quoted may be inaccurate.

It should also be noted that the number of customers who receive a Lone Parent Premium may not equate to the number of Lone Parents. This is because the Lone Parent may be entitled to a more beneficial premium.

I have taken Sutton Office to mean Sutton-in-Ashfield.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the cost and benefit to the taxpayer of a recent party for employees of the Child Support Agency in Plymouth.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. David Jamieson, dated 21 June 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the cost and benefit to the tax payer of a recent lunch that was organised for employees of the Child Support Agency Centre in Plymouth.

The lunch was organised as a local initiative by the Manager of the Child Support Agency Centre in Plymouth, at a cost of £4,800. It replaced the planned opening ceremony for the Centre which was deferred. I am looking further into the circumstances surrounding this occasion.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been made in Nottinghamshire for industrial injuries disablement benefit for emphysema and chronic bronchitis; how many have been successful; and how many and, on what grounds, have been refused.

Mr. Scott: The administration of industrial injuries disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 21 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about claims to Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) for chronic bronchitis and emphysema Prescribed Disease (D12) in Nottinghamshire.

Firstly, I would like to explain that there are two stages to the take on of claims for prescribed disease D12 (known as chronic bronchitis and emphysema), for which industrial injuries disablement benefit has been available since 13 September 1993 for people who have worked for at least 20 years underground in a coal mine.

Stage 1 was restricted to claims from people who were aged 70 or over on 13 September 1993 or had an award of higher rate Disability Living Allowance care component or higher rate Attendance Allowance. Stage 1 ended on 28 February 1994; stage 2 commenced from 1 March and is open to anybody to claim. All claims are considered for payment from 13 September 1993.

The information is not available in the precise format requested. This is because statistics are maintained by Benefits Agency (BA) Branch Offices and Districts whose boundaries do not correspond exactly with those of counties. I have therefore tabled, in the attached appendix, statistics which relate to the BA Districts of East and West Nottinghamshire and the Mansfield Branch Office which deal mainly with the Nottinghamshire area. It should be noted that these figures will include some people living outside the Nottinghamshire area.

The figures have been obtained from a 100 per cent. count as of 12 June 1994 and may be subject to amendment.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Notes:

1. The above figures do not include 66 cases where the claim was returned to the customer to claim at the correct time but they have not reclaimed yet.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of average earnings is represented by severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Scott: As at 4 April 1992, the latest year for which information is available, the average payment of severe disablement allowance was £37·45. This figure, which is based on the rates of benefit payable from 11 April 1991, represents 13·2 per cent. of national average earnings at April 1991.[1]

[1]One per cent. sample of claimants for Great Britain and New Earnings Survey (Great Britain) April 1991.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the cases and amounts of money recovered by the compensation recovery unit from victims of asbestosis in Scotland since 1989.

Mr. Hague: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensions (Christmas Bonus)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what date the Christmas bonus for pensioners was introduced; what was the amount of bonus payable to (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples in its first year; when it was last increased; what would be the amount of Christmas bonus payable to pensioners in 1994 if the level of payment had reflected the movement in the retail prices index or the average wage, whichever was the higher; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he will increase the Christmas bonus for pensioners in the current year to reflect the movement in retail prices since 1972.

Mr. Hague: The Christmas bonus was first introduced in 1972 at the rate of £10 for single pensioners and £20 for pensioner couples. No Government have increased the bonus since. If the Christmas bonus had been increased in line with the movement in the retail prices index or the average wage, whichever was the higher, the rate at December 1994 would be £101·90. We have no plans to increase the bonus.

Michael Boothe

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what review of procedures he has instituted following the conviction of Michael Boothe for benefit fraud.

Mr. Hague: Following the conviction of Michael Boothe, a review of recruitment procedures is being undertaken to improve the checks made upon applicants. We are examining the usefulness of personal referees and the procedures for taking references from previous employers.

In addition, a study is due to start in July to determine why girocheques, and other instruments of payment, are being issued clerically.

A full investigation of any specific allegations of further internal fraud will be conducted.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many refusals of disability living allowance at review have gone to appeal; and in how many cases the refusal at the review stage has been overturned on appeal;

(2) how many refusals of disability living allowance have been taken to review; and in how many cases the original refusal has been overturned at review;

(3) to what extent the proportion of successful appeals against refusal of disability living allowance exceeds the proportion of successful appeals against refusal of attendance allowance in the last three years for which it existed.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested as the reason for review or appeal is not recorded. Neither is it possible to give comparative figures for disability living allowance and attendance allowance appeals. Prior to 1992, decisions to award or refuse AA were made by a designated medical practitioner on behalf of the AA board, and there was no right of appeal analogous to the present right of appeal to a disability appeal tribunal. The AA board, itself, carried out reviews where requested. An appeal could be made to the social security commissioner, but only on a point of law.

Reviews and appeals are not requested solely because of a refusal to award benefit. People already receiving DLA may be dissatisfied with the level or duration of benefit and many reviews are promoted by deterioration in a person's condition.

The available figures relating to reviews and appeals are shown in the tables.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against the passage of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill since its Report stage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Since commencement of Report stage, we have received a number of representations expressing a range of views including opposition to and support for the passage of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill. A detailed breakdown is not available.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to the Exchequer of invalid care allowance; and how many people are in receipt of it currently.

Mr. Scott: As at 13 June 1994, the latest date for which information is available, there were 247,836[1] people in receipt of invalid care allowance.

The latest expenditure estimate for 1993-94 is £433 million[2].

EDUCATION

Schools (Organisation)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he plans to issue fresh guidance on the organisation of schools, reflecting the new provisions of the Education Act 1993.

Mr. Patten: I have, earlier today, issued a consultative circular on the supply of school places, to which interested parties have been asked to respond by Friday 5 August. The circular emphasises the importance of quality, choice, diversity and cost-effectiveness in the provision of new school places and describes the action being taken to secure that. Principal elements in the circular are:

(i) the announcement that, in certain circumstances, I may be prepared to approve proposals for new school places despite the absence of a projected shortfall of places in the area, in particular where in my view the proposed new school places would significantly enhance the quality, choice and diversity of education available in that area and where there would be scope, following the approval of new places, for rationalising places at other schools;

(ii) a description of the new framework for the organisation of schools under the 1993 Act, including the role of the new Funding Agency for Schools;

(iii) guidance on how promoters might establish new grant-maintained schools. This new pathway is already attracting considerable interest;

(iv) an outline of the streamlined process for the removal of surplus places, where practicable, while acknowledging that some may need to be retained to promote parental choice, or to preserve access to schools in rural areas.

WALES

European Constituencies (GDP)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give in cash terms, and as a percentage of the United Kingdom average the gross domestic product per capita for (a) each of the new European constituencies in Wales, (b) the average for Wales, (c) the United Kingdom and (d) the European Community.

Mr. Redwood: The following table gives the information requested, except for information on European constituencies in Wales, which is not available.

	GDP per head[1] 1991	Percentage of United Kingdom average
Wales	12,452	84·5
United Kingdom	14,732	100·0
EUR 12	14,989	101·7

Source: Eurostat

United Kingdom GDP grew faster than GDP in Germany or France in the 1980s—the best relative performance since 1945. The latest forecast from the International Monetary Fund—April—suggests that the United Kingdom will have the fastest growth among major EC countries in both 1994 and 1995. In 1991, direct taxes, including community charge and social security contributions, on households in the United Kingdom took a lower proportion of personal income than in any other major European country.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Wales were entitled to receive sheep premium grants; how many claims, and what percentage of the total number of entitled farmers, were settled by (a) 30 April, (b) 15 May and (c) 31 May.

Mr. Redwood: Some 17,410 eligible claims were received in 1993. The number and percentage of claims settled is as follows:

	By 30 April	By 15 May	By 31 May
Advance Payment	15,877	16,064	16,113
Percentage	91·2	92·3	92·6
Final Payment	Nil	Nil	11,443
Percentage	—	—	65·6

As at 8 June 14,422—82·8 per cent.—of final payments had been sent to farmers.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of the annual reports of the NHS trusts in Wales which became operational on 1 April 1992 and 1 April 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Copies of the annual reports for 1992-93 and 1993-94 will be placed in the Library of the House when available.

Rural Wales Forum

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of the Rural Wales Forum to discuss their survey of the difficulties faced by village halls; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Financial support to village halls in Wales is available under a number of schemes, including the voluntary youth services, village halls and community centres programme. On 29 March, I announced under this programme a three-year grant package of nearly £700,000 to support 44 local youth and community facilities in Wales costing a total of almost £1·62 million.

Other Welsh Office schemes which can be considered for such support include the strategic development scheme and the social grants scheme operated by the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Local Authorities

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities have failed to provide a list of background papers on official reports to their council committees in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the annual budget of the Development Board for Rural Wales; how the members of the Development Board for Rural Wales are appointed; and how many jobs have been brought to rural Wales as a result of the work of the development board.

Mr. Redwood: The development board's grant-in-aid provision for 1992-95 is £14·4 million. This, together with receipts from the sale of land and buildings, rents and other income, will enable the board to plan for gross expenditure of £27·3 million on such activities as property and business development, housing, a social programme and its own overheads.

All candidates for appointment to the development board are considered by Ministers on their individual merits. Account is taken of the overall needs of the board and the balance of skills among members. The legislation provides that the board shall consist of between 11 and 13 members, at least five of whom shall be appointed after consultation with local authorities.

Censuses of employment show that in 1991, the number of employees in rural Wales had increased by 11,000 since 1981. This represents employment growth of 18·9 per cent. in rural Wales. Comparative figures for Wales as a whole and for Great Britain are 2·9 per cent. and 1·2 per cent. respectively. Over the same period, employment in the manufacturing sector had increased by 15·6 per cent. in rural Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make an announcement on the future of the Development Board for Rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

I hope to make my announcement before the summer recess, following consultations with colleagues.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received (a) in favour of the retention of the Development Board for Rural Wales and (b) against the retention of the Development Board for Rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

(2) how many representations he has received during the last 12 months on the subject of sheep scab; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received numerous representations. Sheep scab is a disease which can be controlled by individual farmers, who are aware of the preventive measures and procedures needed to deal with it. The Government have no plans to reintroduce controls. The Government propose to carry out a publicity campaign during the autumn to encourage farmers to treat their sheep. We shall be stepping up our efforts to ensure that unfit animals are not presented for sale by increasing the official veterinary presence at markets.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend will issue guidance to the Staff Commission after Royal Assent to the Local Government (Wales) Bill (Lords). This will deal, among other things, with staff transfer arrangements, prior consideration, and equality of treatment of county and district staff. The draft guidance issued on 21 April and circulated to all members of Standing Committee A has prompted many representations which are being considered.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State undertook on 16 June to write to the hon. Member on a number of staffing matters. He will do so shortly, and will place a copy of his letter in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Primary and Secondary Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the effect on the need for hospital beds of expanding primary care;

(2) what evidence and research her Department has examined on the relationship between the levels of primary and secondary care services.

Dr. Mawhinney: Developments in primary care are only one of the ways in which we can move services closer to the patient's home. These, together with clinical advances leading to shorter lengths of hospital stay and higher rates of day cases, have a significant impact on the number of in-patient beds required. Ultimately, it is for local health authorities, taking account of all these factors and the views of local people, to assess the level of services needed to meet the requirements in their area and to negotiate appropriate provision. We will be examining the changing pattern of service provision to ensure that patients continue to receive effective and high-quality care.

GP Payments

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 June Official Report, column 376, whether the payments to GPs for out-of-hours service are made from (a) family health services authorities cash-limited funds or (b) other funds; and in respect of what expenditure such payments are made.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "Statement of Fees and Allowances", copies of which are available in the Library, sets out the conditions for payments to be made to general practitioners from both cash-limited funds and other funds.

Payments are made for a wide range of expenditure, including those associated with providing out-of-hours services.

Stillbirths

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken to reduce the number of stillbirths as a result of obstetric cholestasis.

Mr. Sackville: Following discussions with Department of Health officials, the newsletter of the President of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and also that of the Royal College of Midwives have carried items on obstetric cholestasis. The revised edition of the Health Education Authority's "Pregnancy Book" will also carry a reference to obstetric cholestasis.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many stillbirths there were in each of the five most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The number of stillbirths registered in England and Wales by year of occurrence for the period 1988-92 are shown in the table.

Year	Number
1989	3,236
1990	3,256
1992	[1]3,160

[1] On 1 October 1992 the legal definition of a stillbirth was altered from baby born dead after 28 completed weeks gestation or more to one born dead after 24 completed weeks gestation or more. Between 1 October and 31 December 1992 there were 216 stillbirths of 24-27 weeks gestation. these are included in the 1992 total.

Children in Care

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list for each local authority in England (a) the total number of children in foster care and (b) the total number of children in residential care homes; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will list the national average cost for residential child care and for foster care, and for each local authority in England (a) the average unit costs for residential child care and (b) the average unit cost for foster care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the numbers of children looked after in residential accommodation and in foster placements at 31 March 1992 and the estimated weekly costs per child, from the publication "Key Indicators of Local Authority Social Services", will be placed in the Library. Care is needed in interpreting the figures because accounting practices vary between local authorities.

NHS Trusts

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has in relation to practising general practitioners, fundholders and non-fundholders, being employed by provider units.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance TEL 94(1), copies of which are available in the Library, has been issued on the appointment of general practitioners as executive directors to the boards of national health service trusts.

Diphtheria

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by year for the last five years, and by regional health authority, the number of cases of diphtheria reported in the age groups (a) under 10 years, (b) 10 to 19 years and (c) 20 years and over.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

AIDS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list by regional health authority the allocations made to local authorities in the Yorkshire region for AIDS support in (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95; and what was the basis of allocations to such authorities in each of these years;

(2) if she will list by regional health authority what allocations were made to local authorities in the Trent region for AIDS support in (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95; and what was the basis of allocation to such authorities in each of these years.

Mr. Sackville: For 1993-94, AIDS support grant allocations were made on the basis of open-ended bids submitted by local authorities. Local authorities not receiving AIDS support grant were given money under the Healthy Alliances scheme for HIV prevention and joint working with health authorities.

For 1994-95 local authorities were invited to submit expenditure plans against indicative allocations of both AIDS support grant and Healthy Alliances moneys. These allocations were based on confidential information available for the first time and supplied to the Department by the Public Health Laboratory Service on the distribution of AIDS cases by local authority area. Where this formula would mean a reduction in grant in 1994-95, local authorities were advised that there might, in exceptional circumstances, be some scope to adjust allocations on a transitional basis and that applications for additional grant could be made.

Rural Community Hospitals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priority she attaches to rural community hospitals as part of the care in the community initiative and the NHS reforms.

Mr. Bowis: Both the new community care arrangements and national health service reforms have emphasised that NHS services should be responsive to patient needs. Community hospitals have a useful role to play in some areas in providing a limited range of services to meet local needs.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the names of the persons, together with any relevant experience or qualifications, who have been appointed to the new London ambulance service committee, the terms of reference of that committee, its quorum, to whom it is accountable and if its minutes and agenda will be published; and what financial functions it will perform.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have continued to receive representations about the availability of disposable needles on prescription. Disposable needles must take their place alongside the many other competing claims for national health service funding. The Department does not attempt to collect centrally information about needles purchased privately by diabetics.

NHS Drugs Bill

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage increase in the NHS drugs bill, compared with the previous year, for each year since 1987; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work has so far been undertaken by the clinical standards advisory group; what further work is planned; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The group's first report "Access to and Availability of Specialist Services" was published with a Government response in July 1993, copies of which are available in the Library. Further reports on "Diabetes" and "Standards of Clinical Care for Patients Admitted Urgently or as Emergencies" will be published shortly. Reports on "Maternity Services—Women in Normal Labour" and "Back Pain" will be published later this year. The group continues work on reports on "Chronic Schizophrenia", "Dental Anaesthesia" and "Care of the Elderly" for publication next year.

Capitation Allowances

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a report on weighted capitation allocation will be published; and what is her policy on changes in the allocation formula for hospital and community health services for 1995-96.

Mr. Sackville: The review of weighted capitation is still taking place.

Patient Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department intends to take action to ensure that staff who raise legitimate concerns about patient care are not bullied into leaving their posts by managers.

Dr. Mawhinney: The guidance—EL(90)51—makes it clear that employees who express views about health care issues in accordance with this guidance are not to be penalised in any way for doing so. A copy is available in the Library.

The responsibility for introducing local procedures to handle such staff concerns lies with each national health service employer.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available centrally.

Community Care Services

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria for independence of potential contractors for community care services which must be met before an organisation is eligible for special transitional grant.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities are required to spend at least 85 per cent. of the Social Security transfer element of the special transitional grant for 1994-95 on community care services provided by the independent sector. The conditions attached to the grant define independent sector expenditure as that amount spent by a local authority on community care services which they arrange to be provided by individuals who are not employed by any local authority under a contract of service or by organisations which are not owned, managed or controlled by any local authority or a combination of local authorities.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were waiting for major heart surgery in hospitals in the Greater London area as of 14 April.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on waiting times is collected by specialty, district health authority and national health service trust. This information is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Medical Records

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require hospitals to consult with the patients concerned prior to the destruction of their medical records after the required minimum period of eight years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It would be impractical to require hospitals to trace and consult all patients before the destruction of their personal health records.

The decision as to how long records should be kept is a matter for the hospital concerned, in consultation with health professionals. The minimum periods recommended in departmental guidance HC(89)20 and HSG(94)11, take account of a number of factors, including the potential need for research purposes, the possibility of complaints by patients and the time limits for bringing action in the courts. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Hand Driers

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the report on hot-air hand driers and paper towels published on 29 March by the University of Westminster.

Mr. Sackville: None. This is a matter for local management.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the Government's response to the Health Select Committee's Report. "Better off in the Community? The Case of People who are Seriously Mentally Ill", HC, 1993-94, 102.

Mr. Bowis: The Government's response, Cm 2588, has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Ashworth Special Hospital

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) patients and (b) psychiatrists there were at Ashworth special hospital in June 1990 and June 1994.

Mr. Bowis: The information is as follows:

(a) 652 and 588.

(b) 22 and 25[1].

Carers

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children under the age of 18 years are involved in the part or full-time care of (a) elderly relatives, (b) people with disabilities and (c) other children for the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) how many (a) women and (b) men became involved in the provision of part or full-time care after retirement age;

(3) how many women between the ages of 60 and 65 years became involved in the provision of part or full-time care.

Mr. Bowis: I am not aware of any research into these areas.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of (a) women, (b) men and (c) all adults, between the ages of 18 and 65 years are involved in the full-time care of children under five years on a (i) voluntary and (ii) paid basis for the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of (a) women, (b) men and (c) all adults, between the ages of 18 and 65 years are involved in the part-time care of children under five years on a (i) voluntary and (ii) paid basis for the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: The available information is shown in the Department of Education statistical bulletin 11/93 "Pupils under 5 Years of Age in Schools in England—January 1993" and "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1993, England". Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

GP Guidelines (Dispensing of Medicines)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has given to GPs who are permitted to provide patients with pharmaceutical services, on the training or qualifications of staff delegated to dispense medicines in their surgeries.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Gammaglobulin

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she takes to ensure that the availability of the vaccine Gammaglobulin is uniform throughout the country; and how many cases of shortfall have been reported to her Department in the last two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Demand for Gammaglobulin is normally met by manufacturers. The Department is aware of two reports since July 1993 of shortages which were the result of supply problems experienced by manufacturers. The Department is in regular contact with the manufacturers and is continuing to monitor the situation.

Generic Drugs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the generic drugs prescribed by general medical practitioners which have been tested and found to be qualitatively inferior to the branded products.

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Medicines Control Agency under its chief executive, Dr. K. H. Jones. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. K. Jones to Mr. Gareth Wardell, dated 22 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning generic drugs prescribed by general medical practitioners which have been tested and found to be of inferior quality when compared to branded products from innovator companies.

The Medicines Control Agency is an Executive Agency of the Department of Health responsible for safeguarding public health by licensing medicines and monitoring adverse reaction to drugs.

Generic medicinal products are assessed for safety, quality and efficacy by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) in the same way as innovator products before being granted a product licence. As part of the assessment the applicant is required to provide data showing that the generic product is equivalent or essentially similar to the innovator product.

The MCA has investigated specific complaints about the quality of medicines products by generic companies and found them to be largely unsubstantiated.

The Medicines Testing Scheme (MTS) monitors the quality of licensed medicinal products in the UK by obtaining samples of both generic and innovator products and testing them for compliance with their registered specifications. Comparison of results has not found a higher proportion of deficiencies in generic products when compared with innovator products. This finding is supported by reports of defective medicines to the Defective Medicines Report Centre which are no greater for generic than for innovator products.

Whilst deficiencies do occasionally occur in both generic and innovator products, there is no evidence from the results of testing carried out by the MTS over the past two years to suggest that generic medicines are of inferior quality compared with the equivalent innovator products.

Alcohol

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to raise the issue of the harmonisation of EU excise duties on alcohol at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers.

Sir John Cope: The issue of excise duties on alcohol will be placed on the agenda of the next meeting of the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers when studies being undertaken by the Commission in accordance with article 8 of Council directive 92/84/EEC have been completed. This may be in time for the next meeting, but if not it will be raised at a later meeting.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to introduce additional measures to prevent illegal importation of alcohol for resale;

(2) if he will initiate a review of measures which are taken in order to prevent the illegal importation of alcohol for resale.

Sir John Cope: Customs has deployed additional staff and taken other measures to counter the threat posed by the illegal importation of alcohol for resale. Customs is continually reviewing its methods and effectiveness in tackling this issue.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to harmonise United Kingdom excise duties on alcohol with those in the rest of the EC.

Sir John Cope: Member states should be free to set the rates that they feel are appropriate to their own particular circumstances, subject only to the agreed minimum rates. That was the basis of the agreement reached by all member states at ECOFIN on 19 October 1992.

Children

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product is currently spent on children aged under six.

Mr. Nelson: This information is not available.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Personal Investment Authority.

Mr. Nelson: The Securities and Investments Board is today announcing that it has decided to recognise the Personal Investment Authority as a self-regulating organisation, and as a self-regulating organisation for friendly societies under the Financial Services Act 1986.

The Treasury has given SIB leave under the FSA to recognise the PIA. That decision was reached after receiving two reports from the Director General of Fair Trading. Both reports concluded that the rules and guidance submitted by the PIA do not, and are not intended nor are likely to have, significantly anti-competitive effects. Having considered the DGFT's report, I have concluded that there is no impediment to the Treasury giving the leave sought by SIB. The DTI and the Friendly Societies Commission, as the prudential regulators for insurance companies and friendly societies respectively, have also certified that they are satisfied that the PIA may be recognised.

The PIA will regulate and supervise all types of retail financial services business covered by the FSA. This includes selling of life insurance and regulated collective investment schemes as well as independent financial advice. The PIA will aim for high standards of regulatory compliance so as to improve investor protection. It will start work as a regulator on 18 July.

SIB is today also giving notice of the revocation of recognition of two existing regulators, the Financial Intermediaries Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association, and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation. The PIA will cover the parts of business which those SROs now regulate and SIB has concluded that it is undesirable for those SROs to continue to operate now that the PIA is to be recognised.

Brewing Industry (Cross Channel Trade)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the effect upon British brewers of cross channel trading.

Sir John Cope: I have received a number of representations on this subject which have mostly been made public. I have also noted other public statements not specifically sent to us.

Building Societies

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to announce the results of his review of legislation affecting building societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I hope to announce the results of this review shortly.

Bank Notes (Demand)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has about the effects on the demand for bank notes of the rise in part-time employment.

Mr. Nelson: It is not possible to assess whether there is any effect of part-time employment on the demand for bank notes.

Inland Revenue Requirements

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what procedures he has in place to ensure that employers paying their employees in cash comply with Inland Revenue requirements for the deduction of tax and national insurance contributions.

Mr. Dorrell: The duties of employers to deduct tax and national insurance contributions are set out in regulations and the Inland Revenue makes every effort through penalties, interest and collection procedures to pursue such deductions if they are not paid.

Top-rate Taxpayers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the number of top rate taxpayers in (a) 1989-90 and (b) 1994-95, giving estimates where necessary (i) in absolute terms and (ii) as a percentage of the total number of income taxpayers and also the change as between 1989-90 and 1994-95 (1) in absolute terms and (2) as a percentage change.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 June 1994]: The information is as follows:

Number of higher rate taxpayers (thousands)	[1]1,500	2,300
Higher rate taxpayers as a percentage of total individuals paying income tax	6	9
Change in higher rate taxpayers between 1989-90 and 1994-95	(Thousands) 800	(Per cent.) 53

[1] Prior to independent taxation married couples are treated as one taxpayer.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) of 16 May, Official Report, column 295, if he will make a statement about the information on the regional distribution of duty-paid imports of beer given to him by the Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association, and the conclusions he has drawn from this information.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 21 June 1994]: Individuals from anywhere in the United Kingdom may purchase duty-paid beer for their own use in other member states of the European Union. We have not sought to verify information on the regional distribution of legal duty-paid imports on beer compiled by the Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association, although we have noted the conclusions.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) of 16 May, Official Report, column 295, if he will make a further statement on the involvement of organised crime in the illegal sale of duty-paid imports of beer.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 21 June 1994]: There is no evidence of large-scale organised crime being involved so far in this illegal activity. Anyone who has evidence of such activity should contact Customs and Excise.

Defence Costs Study

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs will be cut as a result of the defence costs studies; and when implementation of these will begin.

Mr. Aitken: No final decisions have been taken on the recommendations of the defence costs study and it is not possible therefore to say how large a reduction in employment will result. Where proposals would affect employment, the normal consultation procedures will be followed before final decisions are reached. Implementation will begin once decisions are taken.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the timetable for cuts in the defence budget being considered under the defence costs studies will allow for consultation with trade unions and local and regional authorities.

Mr. Aitken: Proposals emerging from the defence costs study will be subject to consultation with the trade unions in the normal manner and will also be notified to other interested parties.

RAF No. 1312 flight

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many crews and aircraft are currently deployed with No. 1312 Flight Royal Air Force; and what changes have been made to these force levels since 1992.

Mr. Hanley: There are three crews and two Hercules C-Mark 1Ks currently deployed with No. 1312 Flight Royal Air Force. No changes have been made to these force levels since 1992.

Low flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the hang-gliding site on Farleton fell, near Kendal, Cumbria, is marked as an avoidance area on the low-flying charts used by Royal Air Force aircrew; and what is the grid reference of the datum point of this site.

Mr. Hanley: The hang-gliding site at Farleton is not designated as an avoidance area. It is however, marked on military low-flying charts and is listed as a warning in the United Kingdom military low flying handbook. The grid reference is N54 42.04 W002 42.13 (SD 542800).

Helicopters

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the Royal Air Force rules governing flight by helicopters not equipped for instrument flying into areas where the forecast or actual weather conditions are below visual flight rules minima.

Mr. Hanley: All RAF helicopters are equipped for instrument flying.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Chinook HC2 helicopter received full clearance from the controller aircraft for flight in instrument meteorological conditions.

Mr. Hanley: CA Release for the Chinook Hc Mk II aircraft type to fly in instrument meteorological conditions was issued on 9 November 1993.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the forecast weather conditions in the vicinity of Cape Nero, Italy, on 9 September 1993 as provided to the crew of the Royal Air Force Gazelle helicopter which crashed on that date.

Mr. Hanley: The weather forecast for the route between Forsinone, Italy and Dijon, France indicated a general cloud base of 2,000 ft with a visibility of 7 to 10 km reducing to 4 km in rain and mist with a small probability of thunderstorms.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected publication date of the report of the investigation into the collision between a Royal Air Force Tornado and a civilian helicopter over Cumbria on 23 June 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The air accident investigation branch of the Department of Transport published its report of this collision on 7 June 1994. A summary of the RAF board of inquiry will be published shortly and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the administrative action taken against the crew of the Gazelle helicopter which crashed on 9 September 1993.

Mr. Hanley: It is not my Department's policy to reveal details of administrative action taken against RAF personnel involved in flying incidents, although action is taken wherever it is considered appropriate.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations, operating units and types of radar equipment forming the Falkland Islands air defence ground environment.

Mr. Hanley: It is not our practice to release operational information of this nature.

Bosnia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many interceptions of aircraft apparently breaching the Bosnian no-fly zone have been made by Royal Air Force Tornado F3s during Operation Deny Flight; and if he will make a statement on the circumstances of each such interception.

Mr. Hanley: Operation Deny Flight is the NATO operation to monitor and enforce the air exclusion zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina. NATO's operational incident statistics for this task are not broken down by national aircraft, nor are separate records kept on the nature of each incident.

Tornado (Navigation System)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the Royal Air Force Tornado GR1 fleet is currently equipped with the NAVSTAR global positioning system.

Mr. Aitken: Of the 96 established aircraft and eight in-use reserves on front-line Tornado GR1 squadrons, 43 aircraft are currently GPS-capable. For the future, we plan to integrate GPS equipment to all aircraft upgraded under the Tornado MLU programme.

Chile (Military Equipment)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contacts or meetings Ministers or officials of his Department, or the Defence Exports Sales Organisation, had with General Pinochet of Chile in regard to military equipment sales during his recent visit.

Mr. Aitken: None.

RAF Brize Norton

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for what reasons soldiers are required to go to South Cerney, near Cirencester, when they are flying from RAF Brize Norton;

(2) how long, on average, soldiers have to report to South Cerney, near Cirencester, before their flight from RAF Brize Norton.

Mr. Hanley: South Cerney is the air mounting centre for United Kingdom-based service units deploying on operations and exercises. It is centrally placed between the RAF's two main air transport bases of RAF Brize Norton and RAF Lyneham and offers facilities not available at either, such as an operations suite, briefing rooms and sufficient holding areas for men and equipment up to brigade size.

Passengers flying from RAF Brize Norton on operations and exercises report to South Cerney an average of four hours before their estimated departure. This allows time for processing, baggage checks, feeding and travel to the airfield.

Policy Study

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that implementation of the Blelloch report will not lead to a reduction in the staffing of the newly formed MOD Guard Service.

Mr. Hanley: Sir John Blelloch's work is concerned with the MOD police and his review which was announced on 15 December, Official Report, column 739, has yet to report. The report which he submitted as part of "Front Line First" is being considered in conjunction with other defence costs study reports, including one on the general subject of security. We hope to make an announcement on the study as a whole, including our proposals for implementation, before the summer recess.

Anti-personnel Mines

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) of 13 May, Official Report, column 288, if anti-personnel mines come into the category of inhumane weapons covered by the United Nations inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Aitken: The United Nations weaponry convention governs the use of certain conventional weapons which may be deemed to be excessively injurious or to have indiscriminate effects. Protocol II of the convention contains prohibitions and restrictions on the use of mines, booby traps and other devices. The use of anti-personnel mines would be covered by this protocol.

Research Funding

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list universities and former polytechnics at which the Ministry of Defence has funded research in the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: I am arranging for the list placed in the Library of the House in May 1992 to be updated to reflect changes since then.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has considered changing his policy on making public details of research projects funded by the Ministry in universities.

Mr. Aitken: It has been and remains our consistent policy not to publish such details.

Low-Flying Training, Goose Bay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for RAF Harrier GR7 aircraft to carry out low-flying training at Canadian forces base Goose Bay.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently no plans to deploy Harrier GR7s to Goose bay for low-flying training. It is, however, possible that Harrier GR7s while staging through Goose bay en route to other North American detachment locations might conduct some low-flying training should the opportunity arise.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year the last Royal Air Force Vulcan deployment to Canadian forces base Goose bay for low-level training took place.

Mr. Hanley: In 1982.

Cambridge Military Hospital

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the restrictions on admissions to the Cambridge military hospital in Aldershot, Hampshire have yet been lifted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Cambridge military hospital, Aldershot restricted routine in-patient admissions from 16 to 26 May as a precautionary measure following the identification among new patients of the Methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus bacteria. The GPs of all patients affected by cancellation of appointments were notified of the reasons behind this restriction, which had the approval of the local NHS consultant in communicable disease control. Neighbouring hospitals were also kept informed of the situation.

The MRSA bacteria was systematically cleared from the hospital and no patients or staff developed any symptoms of MRSA infection. The hospital reopened for routine and emergency admissions from noon on 25 May and elective surgical lists resumed on 26 May 1994. The out-patients department and the maternity wing remained open throughout, while the accident and emergency department stayed open for out-patient cases and emergencies which, could not be safely transferred to other hospitals.

F15E Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the report on the measurement of noise levels of the F15E aircraft is now complete; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Hanley: The report is now complete and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Exercise Diver Mist

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the hon. Member for Don Valley may be sent a de-classified copy of the report evaluating the nuclear weapons accident Exercise Diver Mist held on 18 to 22 April in East Anglia, when it has been completed.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 25 April, Official Report, columns 84-85.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much advance warning was given to each of the civil and emergency authorities who participated in the Diver Mist nuclear weapons accident exercise on 18 to 22 April in East Anglia; and what is the significance of its title.

Mr. Hanley: Representatives of relevant emergency services and local authorities were formally involved in exercise planning from September 1993. The name of the exercise was, as normal, part of a randomly generated series and has no significance.

ENVIRONMENT

Sewers

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average life expectancy of sewers which were constructed prior to the Water Act 1973.

Mr. Atkins: It is for the water company to determine whether a sewer requires replacement. I understand advances in repair and renovation techniques are having the effect of enabling sewers to continue in use after the date at which reconstruction would have been expected to have been required in earlier years.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the actual expenditure on sewerage infrastructure renewal for each water company for each year since 1989 and the total to date;

(2) when he was informed of the £424 million accrued underspend of sewerage infrastructure renewal moneys in the water industry annual accounts;

(3) if he will list chronologically the representations he has received on the requirements of infrastructure renewal in the water industry, indicating which responses to them have been made public;

(4) what is the total accrued national infrastructure renewal charge to date shown in the water industry annual accounts for each water service company.

Mr. Atkins: In order to spread the cost to customers, the Secretaries of State decided at privatisation in 1989 to limit spending on infrastructure renewal in the short term and to build up a liability in the accounts to spend the money at a later date. The Director General of Water Services is responsible for monitoring water companies' spending on infrastructure renewal. Details of the industry's spending on infrastructure renewal are published each year in Ofwat's "Report on Capital Investment and Financial Performance of the Water Companies in England and Wales", copies of which have been placed in the Library. Information on individual companies' expenditure on infrastructure renewal can be obtained from the appointed business accounts which are available from the Ofwat library. Representations on infrastructure renewal in the water industry were received from the Severn Renovation Federation in 1993; the response was not made public, but the industry's spending plans have been in the public domain since 1989.

Water Industry

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the assumption of reasonable return on capital as defined in the Water Industry Act 1991 for (a) the water supply companies and (b) the water service companies.

Mr. Atkins: When price limits were set by the Secretaries of State in 1989 they assumed that a reasonable return on capital would be: (a) a real return of 8 per cent. for most of the water supply companies, 8·5 per cent. for the smallest companies, and (b) a real return of 7 per cent. for the water service companies.

The Director General of Water Services is currently considering the appropriate return on capital as part of his periodic review of price limits. In the consultation paper "Cost of Capital", published in 1991, he suggested that the appropriate range was between 5 and 6 per cent. He will announce the outcome of his review on 28 July 1994.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the land sale transactions he has approved by each water company, (a) since the Water Act 1989 and (b) since 1 February 1992.

Mr. Atkins: Details of such land sales are not registered with the Secretary of State.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to water companies as to the proper procedures under section 10 of the Reservoirs Act 1975 for the appointment of an independent qualified civil engineer; and whether consideration can be given under these procedures to the appointment of former employees of the water company in question.

Mr. Atkins: DOE circular 5/85 set out general guidance on the operation of the Reservoirs Act 1975, including the appointment of qualified engineers. Section 10(9) of the Act requires that independent qualified engineers

> (a) shall not be in the employment of the reservoir undertaker otherwise than in a consultant capacity; and
> (b) shall not have been the engineer responsible for the reservoir or any addition to it as construction engineer, and shall not be connected with such an engineer as his partner, employer, employee or fellow employee in a civil engineering business.

Housing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the scope of his powers to allocate specific moneys to local authorities and housing associations to deal with the problems of Orlit, Whitsun-Fairhurst and other dwelling types with major structural defects; how much he has allocated to local authorities and housing associations in England to deal with these problems in each of the past 10 years; how many houses classified as having major structural defencts have been dealt with due to central Government funding during the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Section 569 of the Housing Act 1985 empowers the Secretary of State to contribute to expenses incurred by local authoriteis in assisting eligible owners of the 24 dwelling types which have been designated in England under section 528 of the Act. The Whitson-Fairhurst type has been designated in Scotland only. Contributions are payable on audited claims made by authorities in the year after the expenses were incurred. The table shows for each of the past 10 years: (a) the total number of dwellings dealt with, as reported by local authorities; (b) the Government's contributions to annual loan charges incurred by local authorities on dwellings dealt with before 1 April 1989; and (c) the capital grants made to authorities from 1 April 1990 on dwellings dealt with on or after 1 April 1989. Housing associations are not responsible for administering the scheme of assistance.

Office Accommodation, Johnstone

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Property Services Agency has for the utilisation or disposal of the premises formerly and currently occupied by the Benefits Agency at Floors street, Johnstone; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Crown building, Floors street, Johnstone, is occupied by the Benefits Agency, which expects to be moving out once it has set up a new customer service point in the area. There are no other Government demands for this space and, as soon as the Benefits Agency has confirmed its intended date of vacation, this freehold property will be offered for sale on the open market.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what hire charge is being paid by the London Docklands development corporation for the hire of the royal yacht Britannia for its reception on 29 June; and what is the estimated additional cost of the actual reception.

Sir George Young: No hire charge is being paid by the London Docklands Development Corporation. The estimated additional cost of the reception is £3,500.

Homelessness

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has consulted with social security Ministers about the recent CHAR report about the bare necessities, the experience of homeless people and the discretionary social fund.

Sir George Young: There has been no consultation at ministerial level about this report, which I understand that CHAR published on 15 June. However, my officials are in discussion with colleagues in the Department of Social Security on this and related matters.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of expenditure given for urban regeneration in the Greater London area; and if he will list the local authorities that have received funding and the amounts received.

Mr. Baldry: The total amount of expenditure given for urban regeneration in the Greater London area in the current year is £296·967 million. This amount is made up from the following programmes—estate action, urban programme, city challenge, task forces, housing action trusts, city grant, funding for the London Docklands development corporation and derelict land grant.

Individual total amounts for each local authority are listed below:

Climate Change

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 339, what is the precise content of the full contribution beyond 2000 for the United Kingdom's climate change programme to which he refers.

Mr. Atkins: Decisions on this have not yet been taken.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage public sector landlords to provide disabled people with personal housing plans; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Decisions about the allocation of public sector housing are a matter for individual housing authorities, taking into account all their powers and duties under housing legislation. For people with community care needs, social services departments and housing authorities are asked to construct an individual's care plan with the objective of preserving or restoring non-institutional living as far as possible, and of securing the most appropriate and cost-effective package of care, housing and other services to meet the person's future needs.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce new building regulations and amend existing building regulations, to promote the development of barrier-free housing in terms of (a) new-build and (b) renovated or modernised properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment intends, in conjunction with the Secretary of State for Wales, to consult on a range of building regulation provisions which could be applied to the design of new dwellings for the benefit of disabled people. There are no plans to consider the application of such requirements to existing dwellings subject to renovation or modernisation.

Timber

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to resist any boycott or ban of any timber species used in the United Kingdom;

(2) what action his Department is taking to ensure that no boycott or ban of any timber species is allowed to be specified in any building contracts that involve public funding;

(3) whether it is current Government policy that no timber should be discriminated against on environmental grounds.

Mr. Atkins: In terms of trade between countries, the treaty of Rome requires that all matters be dealt with by the European Community as a whole. The Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, which is implemented within the Community under EC regulation 3626/82, controls and monitors international trade in many species of plants and animals, including some species of tree.

As to materials within the United Kingdom, my Department is committed in its own green housekeeping policy statement to encourage sustainable forest practices which maintain the biodiversity, productivity and ecological habitats of woodlands. This is reflected in our recently published guide for suppliers of goods and services to the Department, "Selling to DOE", which encourages suppliers to provide joinery, furniture and fittings manufactured only from wood produced from sustainably managed forests. There are no bans on any particular species.

Home Improvements

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government will review the arrangements under which grant is paid to home improvement agencies before deciding whether to extend them beyond 1994-95.

Sir George Young: When we introduced the home improvement agency grant programme in 1991, we made it clear that the arrangements were for four years only in the first instance with any further decisions being taken following a review. We propose to carry out that review this year so that any changes considered necessary can take effect from April 1995. The review will need to consider issues such as the extent to which agencies have met their prime objective of helping people carry out building work to their home; the benefits of the service to both clients and practitioners—especially local authorities—and the need for any change in the nature or range of the service offered. I have today placed in the Library a copy of a letter which my Department has sent to a number of organisations involved with the work of home improvement agencies inviting written representations. We will be happy to receive views in writing from anyone else who wishes to contribute. We hope to announce our main conclusions from the review by the autumn.

Audit Commission

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the relationship between the Audit Commission and his Department, and the other Departments which sponsor the Commission's work.

Mr. Gummer: The Department of the Environment, the Welsh Office and the Department of Health sponsor the Audit Commission. A joint framework document—"Accounting for Independent Audit"—which sets out the relationships between the Audit Commission and its sponsors, and between the sponsor Departments themselves, has been published today. Copies of the document have been placed in the Library.

National Parks

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his timetable for the introduction of legislation to establish the national parks as independent boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 June 1994]: The Local Government (Wales) Bill will allow my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales to establish joint or special planning boards for the three national parks in Wales. However, it is our intention to introduce legislation to establish independent authorities for all 10 national parks in England and Wales as soon as there is a suitable opportunity to do so.

EMPLOYMENT

Acquired Rights Directive

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of the compensation which could be secured in consequence of the various proceedings initiated by the EC Commission in consequence of the acquired rights directive; and if he will investigate the possibility of reducing public expenditure by establishing a programme for settling claims.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government do not believe that any significant claims for compensation resulting from those proceedings will be substantiated.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the consequences in terms of policy of the various actions initiated by the EC Commission against the United Kingdom on the application of the acquired rights directive; and what steps he will take to advise persons who might be entitled to compensation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All but one of the issues raised by the Commission have already been dealt with by amendments to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993. The only outstanding issue concerns arrangements for consultation about proposed transfers. The Government are still considering the judgment on that point.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what liability is accepted by the Government for the costs already paid out by private employers in consequence of the legislation stemming from the acquired rights directive in light of the terms of the court decisions in the EC.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Courts and tribunals take account of relevant decisions by the European Court of Justice in interpreting national implementing legislation. It is for individual employees and employers to take their own legal advice on the effect of national or European law.

Employment and Investment Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the recent Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report on employment and investment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government strongly support the report's conclusions that all industrialised economies need to adapt more rapidly to change than they have done in the past 20 years through increased labour market flexibility and that attempts to slow the pace of change through erecting barriers to trade or regulations to preserve existing patterns of employment will damage prosperity and employment in the long run. That strategy is very much in line with the policies which the Government have been pursuing for the past 15 years and which have brought us a rapid reduction in unemployment, including long-term unemployment.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department or agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) any other services in 1980 to 1983, 1984 to 1987, 1988 to 1991 and 1992 to 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People (Employment)

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the level of compliance of each local authority with the requirements of the statutory quota scheme for the employment of disabled persons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Tables of figures showing the number and percentage of registered disabled people employed by a wide range of public sector employers, including local authorities, are published annually in the Employment Gazette, with the agreement of the employers concerned. The latest available figures relating to 1 June 1992 were published in the April 1993 gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in manufacturing industry in Greater London and Redbridge in 1979 and 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is given in the following table:

Employees in manufacturing industry

Thousands

	Greater London	Redbridge
September 1981	681	13
September 1991	359	6
December 1993	322	[1]—

Between 1981 and 1993 manufacturing output in the United Kingdom rose by 21·5 per cent.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufactured Exports, East Midlands

4. Mr. Garnier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of Britain's manufactured exports originate in the east midlands.

Mr. Needham: Export figures are compiled on a national and not a regional basis. The east midlands contributed fully to last year's record export performance, when our visible exports totalled £121 billion.

Association of South-East Asian Nations

19. Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to promote trade with the ASEAN countries.

Mr. Needham: My Department now has in place a wide range of measures to promote trade with the ASEAN countries. These include the appointment of five export promoters from the private sector, who work with teams of officials to provide first-hand advice and assistance to British companies exporting to the ASEAN bloc.

Competitiveness

21. Mr. Brazier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what role he sees for further reform on intellectual property rights in his programme to improve the competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The United Kingdom is a country which depends on innovation to maintain its competitiveness. Strong protection for intellectual property around the world is therefore important to British industry. The Government were pleased that the recent GATT agreement provides minimum standards of protection and enforcement and we will be seeking to ensure that the agreement is implemented as fully and widely as possible. We will continue to seek improved protection through harmonisation of laws at European and international level.

33. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the United Kingdom's competitiveness with the emerging newly industrialised countries.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom's competitiveness both with the newly industrialising countries and with other developed economies is analysed in the Government's recent White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

26. Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next proposes to meet the Institute of Directors to discuss industrial competitiveness.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer to the answer my hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch).

24. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on his White Paper on Competitiveness.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms Armstrong) earlier today.

Director's Share Options (Disclosure)

22. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to improve disclosure of director's share options.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. However, proposals are contained in the exposure draft of the urgent issues task force of the Accounting Standards Board published on 19 May. The draft is open for comment until 8 July.

Manufacturing Industry

25. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of jobs in manufacturing (a) in June 1979 and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Manufacturing employment has been on a downward trend in the developed world for many years. The number of employees in employment in United Kingdom manufacturing industry was 7·3 million in June 1979 and 4·3 million in March 1994. The fall in manufacturing employment since 1979 reflects structural changes and sharply increased productivity.

27. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to boost manufacturing investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since 1979, investment in plant and machinery has risen by over 50 per cent. Further investment will be encouraged by the profitable and competitive manufacturing base which our policies are designed to maintain.

32. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the percentage change in manufacturing output since 1979 and the figures for Germany, Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1979, manufacturing output increased by 5 per cent. in the United Kingdom; 14 per cent. in West Germany; 43 per cent. in Japan; and 38 per cent. in the United States of America. However the comparison is affected by the timing of the economic cycle. Between 1981 and 1992—similar points in the economic cycle—United Kingdom manufacturing output grew by over a fifth.

Aircraft Industry

28. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts in the European Union about protecting the interests of European aircraft industries.

Mr. McLoughlin: Ministers and officials at my Department have a continuing dialogue on the competitiveness of the European aerospace industry with our partners in the major European aerospace programmes such as airbus.

Post Office

29. Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what responses he has received so far on his Green Paper on the Future of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Green Paper has not yet been published. However, we have received a number of representations since my right hon. Friend's statement on 19 May expressing a range of views on the future of the Post Office.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he was consulted about statements made by the Post Office chief executive on privatisation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Post Office board is entirely free to comment in public on issues concerning the future of its business.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his consultation paper on the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: Shortly.

Shipbuilding Industry

30. Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to discuss with his EU counterparts the future of the shipbuilding industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry is meeting EU counterparts today, when he attends a meeting of the Industry Council, to discuss shipbuilding affairs.

31. Mr. Loyden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the future prospects for the shipbuilding industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My officials are constantly in touch with representatives of the shipbuilding industry about their plans and prospects. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and other Ministers recently met leading representatives of the industy to hear their reports and discuss their industry's future.

Deregulation

34. Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's deregulation initiative.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The booklet "Deregulation—Cutting Red Tape", copies of which are available in the Library of the House, was published in January, setting out the aims and achievements of the deregulation initiative to date. Since then further developments have included:

The completion of the departmental reviews of their regulations. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has recently submitted a report to the Prime Minister on the results of this.

There are now 873 regulations earmarked for amendment or repeal, and 359 of the task forces' 605 recommendations have now been accepted and work is being taken forward by the new task force under the chairmanship of Francis Maude.

The Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill has now completed its passage through the Commons and is currently before another place.

The review of fire safety regulations has now submitted its report to the Government. We are considering its recommendations and how to proceed regarding publication.

We continue to work with the European Commission and other member states to ensure that deregulation is at the heart of European policy making and that all new EC proposals are fully justified in terms of their costs and benefits.

Telecommunications Industry

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to vary the ban on British Telecom and Mercury providing entertainment services via their national networks; what representation he has received regarding the ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: British Telecom and Mercury have precisely the same opportunities as other companies to provide entertainment services, through holding interests in franchises to provide cable television. The Government are committed to maintaining their policies on these matters, as set out in chapter 5 of the 1991 telecommunications White Paper. We have received correspondence on aspects of these policies from a variety of sources, and I have recently explained the justification for our policies to the Trade and Industry Select Committee.

Steel Industry Subsidies, Italy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will take action to secure the withdrawal by the European Commission of subsidies being paid by the Italian Government to that country's steel industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government will continue to press the Commission to take firm action against any subsidies paid by the Italian Government to their steel industry which are not permissible under the European Coal and Steel Community treaty or the steel aids code.

Machine Tools

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the latest figures for imports and exports of machine tools between the United Kingdom and Japan, Germany and Italy.

Mr. Needham: The information is provided in the table:

United Kingdom trade in machine tools[1] for 1993
(£ million, current prices)

Country	Imports	Exports
Japan	106·9	9·2
Germany	122·7	43·4
Italy	38·1	14·6

[1] Machine tools and their parts are defined as headings 728, 733 and 735 of the Standard International Trade Classification.

Disabled People

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce a requirement that company annual reports should include a statement of their level of compliance with the statutory quota for the employment of disabled persons.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so. The Companies Act 1985 already requires companies with more than 250 employees to include in their directors' report a statement describing their policy applied during the financial year for the employment of disabled persons.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will announce the site of the headquarters of the Coal Authority.

Mr. Eggar: The Government gave a commitment in their coal review White Paper that the headquarters of the Coal Authority would be located in Nottinghamshire. I announced yesterday in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Duncan Smith) Official Report, column 83, the initial accommodation arrangements being made for the authority pending its own consideration of longer term arrangements. The authority's headquarters will be located at 200 Lichfield land, Berry Hill, Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, which British Coal Opencast will also continue to use for the time being. The authority will additionally take over British Coal's abandoned mine plans facility at Bretby in Staffordshire, and co-locate certain associated functions.

Fire Safety

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement he announced on 17 January has produced its report; whether it will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The review team submitted its report to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for the Environment and myself on 24 May. We are publishing the report today and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The review team has carried out a thorough evaluation of the present system and identified a number of potential improvements. Since January, the review team has undertaken widespread consultation with all interested parties. It has found that there is an overlap in present legislation and that enforcement arrangements may impose burdens on businesses and create avoidable uncertainty. Enforcement responsibilities are sometimes blurred. This makes more difficult the task of enforcing the legislation and co-ordinating the activities of the various enforcers.

The report puts forward a number of proposals which the review team believes would reduce burdens on business and introduce greater clarity into the system without undermining safety standards. These recommendations are now under consideration by Ministers. No decisions have yet been taken and we are committed to full consultation before any proposals for changing the existing arrangements are made. We would welcome the views of interested parties. We shall be consulting those organisations with a known interest in this matter for their views by 31 October 1994.

The review team has risen well to the challenge, and we expect that greater clarity and simpler arrangements will improve standards of fire safety.

Lloyd's

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Lloyd's passed the annual solvency test.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The statement and certificates demonstrating Lloyd's solvency for the year ended December 1992, which are required by part IV of the Insurance Companies Act 1982, were received by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade at the end of August 1993. The corresponding documentation in respect of the year ended December 1993 should be delivered this August.

Inward Investment

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to convene a conference of representatives of overseas investors to discuss locating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau regularly holds seminars in its major overseas markets. These are always well attended.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those activities within his Department which have been, or are subject to market testing; those activities which have been awarded to private contractors; those cases in which external consultants have been employed and the total cost of consultancy fees in relation to market testing.

Mr. Eggar: A full list of activities subject to market testing in 1992-93 and 1993-94 was published in the citizens charter first and second reports, Cm. 2101 and Cm. 2540 respectively. To date, the private sector has been awarded contracts within the following areas: the offshore geology programme, office and support services, and training. External consultants have been employed to support market testing of the activities listed in the reports with the exception of oil and gas royalties, ship radio licensing, outward missions and staff counselling. To date the total cost of consultancy fees for market testing has been £2·5 million.

Early Payment Initiative

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the reduction of outstanding debts as a result of his proposed initiatives for early payments.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced in the White Paper on competitiveness a number of measures to address late payment. We will continue to monitor changes in payment times after these measures have been implemented.

Exports

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what (a) proportion and (b) value of United Kingdom exports went to (i) the EC and (ii) non-EC countries in 1985, 1990 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom exports to the EC in 1985, 1990 and 1993 were £38 billion, £54 billion and £64 billion respectively, representing 49 per cent., 53 per cent. and 53 per cent. of United Kingdom exports. The value of exports to non-EC countries were £40 billion, £47 billion and £57 billion, representing 51 per cent., 47 per cent. and 47 per cent. of United Kingdom exports.

Defence Exports

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what applications for export licences to South America for defence equipment have (a) been granted, (b) received and (c) discussed over the past year; and what information regarding United Kingdom arms exports to Chile was given in the UN register.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1994]: Details of applications for export licences for goods on the military list of the Export of Goods (Control) Order to South American countries are as follows. It has not been possible to give separate figures for applications discussed, as it is not possible, without disproportionate effort, to distinguish between those applications where discussions took place and those where they did not.

Copies of the United Kingdom's returns for 1992 and 1993 to the UN register of conventional arms are in the Libraries of the House.

Unfair Consumer Contracts Directive

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what specific consultations he had with industry prior to the finalisation of the EC unfair consumer contracts directive about the content of that directive.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 June 1994]: We consulted extensively with industry, and with other interested parties, on the text of the draft directive as soon as it became available. The comments that we received were taken into account during the subsequent negotiations.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the EC unfair consumer contracts directive applies to real property transactions; and whether the United Kingdom legislation required to implement the directive will distinguish between real and personal property.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 June 1994]: The Government's view is that the unfair contract terms directive does not apply to the sale of real property, though it would apply to any secondary transactions. It is not intended in the implementing regulations to distinguish between real and personal property.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning the differences between the European Commission's understanding of the term "goods" in connection with the EC unfair consumer contracts directive and the definition of the term in United Kingdom law; how any discrepancy between the two understandings of the terms will be resolved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 June 1994]: I am not aware of any such differences. There is no general definition of what constitutes goods in United Kingdom law.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from trade associations in the financial services sector, the manufacturing sector, and the house-building sector concerning the EC unfair consumer contracts directive; and what plans he has to meet a group representing trade associations in those sectors to discuss the directive.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 June 1994]: My Department has received 87 responses to its consultation paper on the implementation of the unfair contract terms directive. These include a number from trade associations in the financial services, manufacturing and construction sectors. I have no current plans to meet any trade associations from those sectors, but a number of meetings have been held with my officials.

SCOTLAND

Enzootic Bovine Leukosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current number of cattle aged 30 months or under with enzootic bovine leukosis.

Sir Hector Monro: Currently there are eight animals in Scotland under the age of 30 months which have reacted positively to tests for enzootic bovine leukosis.

Norwegian Salmon Imports

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Government have made to the European Commission to ensure that the minimum import price of Norwegian farmed salmon into the Community is reinstated.

Sir Hector Monro: None. Minimum import prices were introduced last autumn as an exceptional and temporary measure to counter low prices and expired on 17 May this year. Current data indicate that prices are well above the previous minimum import levels.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is being taken to prevent Norwegian farmed Atlantic salmon being dumped on the United Kingdom market.

Sir Hector Monro: We are giving every assistance to the industry in its efforts to seek a more stable market. My right hon. Friend and I have had regular meetings with the industry to ensure full understanding of the situation and to discuss possible solutions, and have brought about the resumption of discussions between the Scottish and Norwegian fish farming representative organisations.

St. Anthony's Church, Johnstone

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish an ad hoc task force of relevant interests and expertise to provide St. Anthony's RC church, Hallhill road, Spateston, Johnstone, with advice on what sources of public funding may be available to assist repair to the church roof and to make the building wind and watertight; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I am advised that Historic Scotland has already provided the hon. Member with advice, in a letter from the chief executive dated 14 April 1994, on possible sources of public funding to assist with the repair of St. Anthony's church.

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce new building regulations or amend existing building regulations, to promote the development of barrier-free housing in terms of (a) new-build and (b) renovated or modernised properties; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend intends to consult on a range of building regulation requirements which could be applied to the design of new dwellings for the benefit of disabled people. We have no plans to apply any such new requirements retrospectively to existing dwellings.

Scottish Homes has announced that it expects recipients of grant funding to adopt a policy of promoting barrier-free standards wherever possible; and the draft housing community care circular issued for comment in February drew attention to the advantages of barrier-free housing.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage public sector landlords to provide disabled people with personal housing plans; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local housing authorities and Scottish Homes to decide what housing information and advice to provide for applicants.

The draft housing and community care circular issued for comment in February emphasised that community care users, including those with physical disabilities, and their carers, should participate in individual community care assessments covering the range of housing, health and social care services suited to their needs.

Paisley Arts Centre in Education

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the amount of (a) capital and (b) recurring grants paid to the Paisley Arts Centre in Education, the youth theatre group based in Paisley, by the Scottish Arts Council in each year since 1988; what percentage of its outturn expenditure was covered by Scottish Arts Council grants in each year during the same period; what moneys PACE received from other sources in his Department during the same period; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he next plans to meet representatives of the Scottish Arts Council to discuss the youth theatre movement in Scotland; if he intends to raise the funding of the Paisley Arts centre in Education, the Paisley-based youth theatre group; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what changes in the criteria governing the allocation of grants by the Scottish Arts Council might have affected awards to the Paisley Arts centre in Education, the Paisley-based youth theatre group; whether he was consulted about any changes to these criteria; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement on the value and importance of the youth theatre movement in Scotland, with particular reference to the Paisley-based Paisley Arts centre in Education theatre group.

Sir Hector Monro: The relationship between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Scottish Arts Council is governed by the arm's-length principle. It is for the Scottish Arts Council to determine its artistic policy and strategy and to decide, in line with its artistic judgment, which individual arts bodies should benefit from the council's funds. Questions relating to the funding of arts organisations should be addressed to the council. My right hon. Friend attaches importance to the youth theatre movement in Scotland and will give support amounting to £62,920 in 1994-95 under section 23 of the National Heritage (Scotland) Act 1985 to the Scottish Youth Theatre, which is a national organisation operating on a Scotland-wide basis, the activities of which are broadly educational.

No Scottish Office grant has been paid to PACE. My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the Scottish Arts Council to discuss the youth theatre movement.

Rats

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of (a) the likely change in the population of rats in the sewerage system and (b) which factors will determine that change; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The regional and islands councils in Scotland are responsible for sewerage matters and no authority has indicated to my right hon. Friend that there has been any recent change in the population of rats in sewers. No significant problem with rats in sewerage systems in Scotland is known to exist. Any outbreak or an increase in the rat population in sewers would be dealt with by the authorities' drainage departments.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the average weekly rental charge and (b) the average increase in the weekly rental charge for (i) each district council in Scotland and (ii) Scottish Homes houses in each year since 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the tables:

Red Squirrels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by county the current estimate of the red squirrel population; and what were the figures (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Information on the red squirrel population is not available by county. The estimated total population of red squirrel in Scotland is 121,000 but there are no comparable figures for five and 10 years ago. The red squirrel is fully protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. Scottish Natural Heritage is organising a conference of parties interested in squirrel management in Scotland in October of this year.

Strathclyde Police

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the costs of funding Strathclyde police will be apportioned to constituent local authorities in future years; what will be the basis of calculation of contribution from each authority; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The amalgamation scheme for the new Strathclyde joint police board following local government reorganisation will specify how the payment by the constituent authorities of the expenditure incurred by the board will be apportioned. My right hon. Friend will consult the authorities, before making the scheme, to seek their views on how costs should be apportioned, and will take full account of their preferences before making the amalgamation scheme.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the total value of revenue lost to local authorities by non-payment of non-domestic rates; if he will publish a table showing the value of unpaid non-domestic rates for each (a) regional and (b) district authority in cash terms for the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: In calculating the amounts which levying authorities have to contribute to the non-domestic rating pool, the Scottish Office Environment Department assumes that authorities will write off 1 per cent. of non-domestic rate income annually. Information about the level of actual non-payment in individual authority areas is not held centrally. However, local authorities do not lose any revenue as a result of non-payment of non-domestic rates as within each authority's overall level of aggregate external finance—which comprises non-domestic rate income, revenue support grant and specific grants—any shortfall of non-domestic rate income is made up with revenue support grant.

Quarries

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the specific powers and duties of (a) strategic planning authorities, (b) local planning authorities, (c) environmental health authorities, (d) Her Majesty's inspector of pollution and (e) other public bodies in relation to control of blasting and operational activities at quarries in Scotland; what plans he has to seek additional powers for any of these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Planning authorities in Scotland—regional, islands and district councils—have powers under the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 to grant planning permission in respect of, inter alia, quarrying proposals: in so doing, they may impose conditions restricting operational practices including, for example, times of blasting, suppression of noise, dust and so on.

Environmental health authorities in Scotland—islands and district councils—have general powers under part III of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and section 16 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897 to control noise nuisance. They also have powers under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to control dust and other emissions to the atmosphere.

Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate has no specific powers or duties in relation to blasting or other operational activities at quarries in Scotland. The Health and Safety Executive is responsible for making arrangements for the enforcement of health and safety legislation at quarries in Scotland. Its powers and duties are set out in the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and other relevant statutory provisions.

My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the powers available to these bodies are sufficient, and has no plans, at present, to seek to add to them.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the remit of the Homepoint group set up by Scottish Homes; and if he will make a statement on the progress of its work.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Homepoint is the result of action initiated by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to invite Scottish Homes to evaluate the quality and availability of housing information and advice. The remit of Homepoint is to improve the quality and scope of such advice in Scotland, working through local authorities, voluntary providers and the private sector. I understand that Homepoint has just issued its third newsletter and that this describes progress made to date; copies can be obtained from Scottish Homes.

Councillors (Allowances)

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take account of the proposal of the Secretary of State for the Environment on councillors' allowances; and if he will produce a consultative paper on increasing payments to councillors in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office Environment Department will shortly issue a consultation paper on possible changes to the new system of councillors' allowances introduced in April 1991. This will take account of the current Department of the Environment consultation exercise.

Public Sector Housing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much subsidy was directed towards (a) council housing and (b) other public sector housing (i) in the latest year for which he has information and (ii) in 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 June 1994]: In 1979-80 direct subsidies to council housing through housing support grant and rate fund contributions amounted to £286·3 million, compared with £36·1 million in 1993-94. In 1979-80, subsidies to other Scottish public sector housing amounted to £64·9 million, compared with £21·3 million in 1993-94. The reduction reflects the Government's policy of moving away from indiscriminate general subsidies.

Assistance is now targeted on tenants in greatest need through the housing benefit system. Housing benefit payments made to Scottish public sector tenants in 1993-94 totalled nearly £600 million.

TRANSPORT

Driving Tests

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to privatise the Driving Standards Authority's driver and rider testing functions.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 27 May 1993 at columns 683-84 in which I announced that, following the review of the Driving Standards Agency's framework document, I had decided that these functions should continue to be conducted by an executive agency of the Department of Transport. The position will be reviewed in three to four years time.

Vessel Registration Requirements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received up to May for the repeal of the Aliens Restriction (Amendment) Act 1919 requirement for British officers on British-registered vessels.

Mr. Norris: There have been 50 responses to the consultation document setting out these proposals.

Railway Property (Hunt Trespass)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to prevent cases of hunt trespass on railway lines; and if he will issue warnings to hunts for dangerous trespass;

(2) what plans he has to issue warnings to hunts involved in incidents of hunt trespass on railway lines.

Mr. Freeman: None. The prevention of hunt trespass on railway lines is a matter for Railtrack and the British Transport police. The BTP issues warnings in accordance with the Attorney-General's guidelines.

Traffic Forecasts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all past, current and proposed research commissioned or to be commissioned for or on behalf of the advisory panel on the review of the methodology of the traffic forecasts; and when he intends to publish this research.

Mr. Key: No research has been commissioned for, or on behalf of, the advisory group. The Department has in progress several pieces of research particularly relevant to traffic forecasting, listed in my answer to the earlier question of the hon. Member on 23 May at column 53. The Department may consider letting more research on the advice of the group. No decision has yet been taken on the publication of this research.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations underlay his decision to include on the advisory panel for the review of traffic forecasts methodology representatives nominated by road lobby groups but not representatives nominated by environmental groups.

Mr. Key: The members of the advisory group were selected by the Department of Transport for the expertise that they could contribute to the forecasting process. As I said in my answer to an earlier question by the hon. Member on 23 May at column 53, the members do not represent any interest or group.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the national road traffic forecasts will next be revised.

Mr. Key: The national road traffic forecasts are kept continuously under review, and will be revised if and when the need becomes apparent.

Efficiency Targets

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the reports due on 10 June produced by heads of departments for the 20 per cent. efficiency targets for each of the next two years.

Mr. MacGregor: No. These are internal management documents.

Disclosure of Information

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in how many cases the Data Protection Act 1984 was breached in the instance of the DVLA releasing information on the owners of vehicles to community charge collectors.

Mr. Key: DVLA is not aware of any instances in which the Data Protection Act has been breached as a result of releasing vehicle keeper details to local authorities.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last financial year the DVLA gave information on the owners of vehicles to community charge collectors in Scotland.

Mr. Key: In the last financial year, DVLA processed more than 5 million inquiries from the police and local authorities. Information on the number of inquiries by separate subject and local authority could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 108, regarding departmental employees, if he will give the total cost of employing each grade of staff.

Mr. Norris: The table shows total salary costs for each grade and grade equivalent at April 1993 expressed as an annual figure. The salary costs comprise basic pay, allowances, superannuation and national insurance contributions.

Grade	Total salary cost £
Grade 1	108,598
Grade 2	320,797
Grade 3	1,652,525
Grade 4	1,018,554
Grade 5	5,901,718
Grade 6	7,013,177
SEO	29,127,629
HEO	31,144,504
EO	71,343,989
AO	55,932,859
AA	34,451,713
Traffic commissioners	374,136

Costs do not include 1993 pay settlements as these were not paid until after 1 April. They reflect all paid staff, including those working part time.

London City Airport

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions currently exist on flights to and from London City airport; and what is the current number of scheduled flights to and from London City airport.

Mr. Norris: The 1991 granting of planning permission for development at London City airport was subject to a number of conditions on the use of the airport. These include limits of 40 air transport movements per day at weekends, bank holidays and public holidays, 130 per day on other days and 36,500 air transport movements per calendar year. There are further restrictions which are expressed in terms of noise levels of aircraft.

In the 12 months to 31 March 1994, there were some 12,100 scheduled flights to and from London City airport. Currently on a typical weekday there are some 66 scheduled flights—Source: London City airport.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the joint air miss working group reports on the air misses in the vicinity of Humberside airport on 23 May 1991 and 13 October 1992.

Mr. Norris: My officials have made arrangements with the Civil Aviation Authority, for copies of the documents mentioned, to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

The hon. Member may also wish to know that with immediate effect, further copies of the quarterly published, collated reports of the joint air miss working group will be placed in the Library.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the role and function of his Department's Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment.

Mr. Key: The Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment appointed by the Secretary of State for Transport to advise him on any significant changes proposed in trunk road appraisal methods.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the reports his Department has commissioned from the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment in the last 10 years; what was the date of publication for each; and if he will place each of the reports in the Library.

Mr. Key: In the last 10 years the Department of Transport has commissioned three reports from the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment, as well as asking for advice on various specific trunk road appraisal issues. Two reports have been published; "Urban Road Appraisal" dated June 1986, and "Assessing the Environmental Impact of Road Schemes" dated March 1992. A copy of each has been placed in the Library. The third, "Trunk Roads and the Generation of Traffic" which has recently been submitted to the Secretary of State, will be published when a response has been prepared. A copy of the report and Government response will be placed in the Library at that time.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what communications Her Majesty's Government have had with the European Commission regarding road schemes in the last five years.

Mr. Key: The Government have had many and various communications with the European Commission about road schemes during the last five years. A comprehensive analysis could not be undertaken without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the annual running cost of his Department's Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken.

Mr. Key: The Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment running costs in financial year 1993-94 were £35,348·57; taken from the Highways, Safety and Traffic Administration subhead of class VI, vote 1, National roads, England.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the current members of his Department's Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment.

Mr. Key: The terms of appointment of the members of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment ended on submission of the report, "Trunk Roads and the Generation of Traffic" in May 1994. A new committee has yet to be appointed.

Membership of the most recent committee was:

Chairman

Mr. D. Wood QC, Principal of St Hugh's College Oxford

Vice-chairman

Mr. R. H. Stewart, Independent Planning Consultant

Members

Dr. D. Coombe, Director, The MVA Consultancy

Dr. P. Goodwin, Director of the Transport Studies Unit, University of Oxford

Professor P. Hill, Director of the Transport Operations Research Group, University of Newcastle upon Tyne

Mr. D. Hutchinson, County Surveyor, Dorset County Council

Mr. P. Mackie, Senior Lecturer in Economics, University of Leeds

Miss A. M. Lees, Environmental Adviser. Formerly Controller of Transportation and Development, GLC

Mr. M. E. G. Taylor, Chairman of Eric R. Taylor (Services) Ltd.

Road Schemes (Batz)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures he has taken to ascertain whether increase in volumes of traffic resulting from the improvements to the A46 from Upper Swainswick to Tormarton, together with the Swainswick Batheaston bypass will cause pollution in the centre of Bath to exceed European Union limits;

(2) what are his Department's predictions for increases in numbers of vehicles per day, through Bath once the Upper Swainswick to Tormarton road scheme has been completed;

(3) what is the current cost benefit analysis of the Swainswick section of the Swainswick-Batheaston bypass.

Mr. Key: These questions are operational matters for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, is writing to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Don Foster, dated 22 June 1994:

Trunk roads around Bath
A4/A46 Batheaston/Swainswick bypass and Upper Swainswick-Tormarton improvement

I am writing in response to your three recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Transport about trunk road schemes near Bath. These are matters for which the Highways Agency is now responsible. Perhaps I may take your three questions in turn.

Question 2648—What is the current cost benefit analysis of the Swainswick section of the Swainswick/Batheaston Bypass?

Answer—The benefit to cost ratio for the Batheaston/Swainswick Bypass is 1.32:1. However, there are no figures available for just the Swainswick section as the analyses undertaken were concerned with the whole of the scheme.

Question 2647—What are the predictions for increases in numbers of vehicles per day, through Bath, once the Upper Swainswick to Tormarton road scheme has been complete?

Answer—The trunk road improvements will improve access to Bath, but through north/south traffic must still cross Cleveland Bridge. The amount of traffic with a destination in Bath is unlikely to change but some redistribution on roads within Bath may occur. It will continue to be limited by the traffic restraint measures imposed by the Highway Authority and the number of parking spaces provided in the city. In the longer term we see the A36 East of Bath to Beckington scheme in combination with Batheaston and Swainswick bypasses helping through traffic to avoid Bath.

Question 2646—What measures have been taken to ascertain whether increase in volumes of traffic resulting from the improvements to the A46 from Upper Swainswick to Tormarton, together with the Swainswick/Batheaston bypass will cause pollution in the centre of Bath to exceed European Union limits?

Answer—A traffic study has indicated up to 600 vehicles per day may transfer from other routes within Bath to the London

Road West as indicated in Mr. Nutt's letter of 28 March 1994. This will have no measurable effect on pollution in the centre of Bath.

Construction work on the Batheaston-Swainswick bypass started in March this year. The work is programmed for completion in 1996. Development of the Swainswick-Tormarton improvement is at a comparatively early stage, and is subject to the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Railways (Disabled Access)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers and duties he has to provide, or encourage the provision of, adequate access for disabled people to railway stations and rolling stock throughout the United Kingdom; what plans he has to seek new powers and/or duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I attach great importance to making provision for disabled people travelling on the railway. The Railways Act 1993 imposes a specific duty on the Rail Regulator to have particular regard to the interests of disabled people and requires him to draw up and encourage the adoption and implementation of a code of practice for protecting the interests of disabled users of rail passenger services and stations. As a condition of their licence, all operators of passenger services or stations are required to establish and comply with a statement of policy and detailed arrangements, procedures, services and other benefits to protect the interests of disabled people, taking account of the regulator's code of practice. The policy and arrangements have to be approved by the regulator.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet representatives of the privatised rail industry in Scotland to discuss the lack of access for disabled people to the premises and rolling stock at Gilmour Street station in Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to meet representatives of the railway industry in Scotland to discuss this specific issue. Much of our present railway infrastructure was constructed at a time when less attention was paid to the needs of disabled people. The existence of a code of practice, to be published shortly by the Rail Regulator, will mean that when new facilities are being designed, or old facilities refurbished, there will be a statutory code to which the designers can look to ensure that disabled passengers' needs are not forgotten. A sensible input at an early stage in the design can make all the difference and be of benefit to all passengers.

Harbours (Waste Disposal)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what means the Government will introduce to encourage port and harbour authorities to evaluate and set an integrated port fee which includes an appropriate charge for the disposal of waste such as oily waste, garbage and unwanted chemicals.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce integrated harbour fees incorporating fees for handling oily wastes in order to encourage ships to use port waste-handling facilities.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency is currently undertaking a comprehensive survey of the current provision of reception facilities in United Kingdom ports. Analysis of the survey results will indicate the extent to which charges for the use of reception facilities are integrated into harbour fees. Based on this information, the Government will decide what further action, if any, needs to be taken.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the United Kingdom Government will seek through the International Maritime Organisation a requirement that when garbage is discharged from a ship at shore an entry is placed in the ship's log and that such entries are subject to checking.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom is taking an active role at IMO in the development of shipboard waste management plans and record keeping procedures for the discharge of garbage. Record books for the disposal of garbage will, when they are introduced, be subject to checks by port state control inspectors to ensure that the regulations are being complied with.

Great Yarmouth Harbour

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has examined the need for an outer harbour at Great Yarmouth; and what plans he has to secure EU funding for such a harbour.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 June 1994]: Last year, as part of the study by the European Commission of trans-European transport networks, my Department invited ports to submit proposals for projects which fulfilled certain criteria designed to identify projects of Community interest. The Great Yarmouth port authority put forward a proposal for an outer harbour which appeared to meet the criteria. My Department therefore forwarded this proposal to the Commission, along with more than 100 other port projects, but without prejudice to any European or United Kingdom approvals which might be required, whether for statutory, planning or financial purposes.

Although the Commission initially identified the Great Yarmouth proposal, with many other port projects, as potentially of common interest, the Commission's present position on financial support for ports projects generally, or for individual projects, is not resolved. Nor have I yet decided whether to support the project for EU funding.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the likely impact of rural post office closures on total car use in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No such assessment has been made.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 23 June 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what advice and instructions have been issued from his Department concerning the granting of legal aid to those pursuing claims concerning Creutzfeldt Jakob disease.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Civil Enforcement Agents

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 335, when he expects to be able to publish his analysis of the responses received to the consultation paper on the organisation and management of civil enforcement agents.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The consultation exercise raised a wide range of difficult issues. The Lord Chancellor is continuing to give consideration to these, and is not in a position to say when an announcement will be made.

DEFENCE

D-day Commemoration

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, column 127, what arrangements were made for the funding of the national commemoration of the 50th anniversary of D-day.

Mr. Hanley: The expected additional cost to the MOD of the commemoration of D-day is between £3,000,000 and £4,000,000. This covers expenditure on the military events organised by the MOD. Parliamentary approval to this expenditure is being sought in the 1994-95 supply estimates for defence: operational and support costs vote, class I, vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of £1,000,000 on new services is being covered by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

Troop Location

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future location of units returning from Germany and Hong Kong; and if he will now announce the location for the second additional infantry battalion announced on 3 February 1993, Official Report, column 321.

Mr. Hanley: A number of options have been considered for permanent barracks required for three Army units returning from Germany in 1995, for one of the battalions returning from Hong Kong, and for the Gurkhas. I am pleased to announce that I have decided that the following locations will be retained by the Army as permanent baracks:

i. The Gurkhas, currently in Church Crookham near Aldershot, will move to Elizabeth Barracks, Pirbright around the end of the year. Until that time Pirbright will house the Black Watch, returning in July from Hong Kong.

ii. The Army Apprentice College, Chepstow will be converted into a permanent infantry barracks and will be the home for the 1st Battalion the Royal Welch Fusiliers from December 1995.

iii. 14 Signals Regiment, returning from Germany, will be housed permanently in RAF Brawdy from December 1995. Until then, RAF Brawdy will be used as temporary accommodation for the 1st Battalion the Royal Welch Fusiliers.

iv. 16 Regiment Royal Artillery (Air Defence), returning from Germany, is to be located at the Royal Artillery Barracks, Woolwich by November 1995. Woolwich is the historic home of the Royal Artillery.

v. 39 Regiment Royal Artillery, returning from Germany, is to be located at Albermarle Barracks, Ouston from November 1995.

I am still considering possible locations for another permanent infantry barracks to cater for the second of the two additional infantry battalions announced on 3 February 1993, Official Report, column 320. I hope to be able to make a further announcement very soon.

Britannia

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement about the future of Her Majesty's yacht Britannia.

Mr. Rifkind: HM yacht Britannia was launched in 1953 and commissioned for service in January, 1954. In the 40 years since then she has travelled over 1 million miles and has served as royal residence and a setting for official entertainment by the Queen and members of the royal family during state and other visits overseas and in home waters, and has also been used for the promotion of British commercial interests overseas. She was originally designed to have the additional function of serving as a hospital ship in time of war, but has never served in this capacity and it is no longer practicable for her to do so. Her outstanding contribution over the years reflects the great care and professionalism which the Royal Navy, and in particular her successive ship's companies, have devoted to her.

The yacht last underwent a major refit in 1987. A further refit at an estimated cost of some £17 million would be necessary in 1996-97 but would only prolong her life for a further five years. In view of her age, even after the refit she would be difficult to maintain and expensive to run. It has therefore been decided to decommission Britannia in 1997.

The Government will now consider the question of whether to replace Britannia. The Queen has made it known that in the light of changes in the pattern of royal visits since the yacht was built, she does not consider a royal yacht to be necessary in future solely for the purposes of royal travel. None the less, in view of the success of Britannia in her representational role during state visits, and on other state occasions, and of the part played by the royal yacht in trade promotion, the Government believe it right to consider, without commitment, whether there should be a replacement at some future point, together with other options for meeting the tasks presently fulfilled by Britannia.

The Government will be seeking Her Majesty's views on what should happen to Britannia after 1997. We shall seek to find a way of enabling her to continue to serve a useful purpose, even though she will no longer go to sea. A further statement will be made in due course.

Territorial Army (Germany)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any decision has been taken on the future of the continental Territorial Army in Germany.

Mr. Hanley: The continental Territorial Army, CTA, which is some 160-strong, was formed in Germany in 1984. At that time, when there was still a real threat from the Warsaw pact and Soviet Union, there was seen to be clear advantage in recruiting reserve forces from among those with useful skills who could be immediately available on mobilisation in the area they are likely to serve. The requirement for Territorial Army units based in Germany has now been reviewed following the changes in the security environment that have resulted from the end of the cold war. It has been decided that there is no longer a need to base TA units in Germany and the CTA will be disbanded with effect from 30 November 1994. Any individual who wishes to continue to serve will be given the opportunity to do so in a United Kingdom-based unit. I should like to take the opportunity to express my appreciation to all the volunteers who have served with the CTA since its formation.

Maintenance Group Defence Agency

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key management targets of the Maintenance Group Defence Agency for the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Hanley: The Maintenance Group Defence Agency's key management targets for 1994-95 concentrate on three principal objectives:

(a) The effective performance of the Group;
(b) The economic use of resources;
(c) The introduction of management initiatives.

The group's targets are:

(1) To achieve at least 98 per cent. of the specified aerosystems maintenance task to standard and on time;
(2) To achieve the Joint Service Publication of 336 Defence Supply Manual speed-of-issue and pipeline targets for at least 95 per cent. of the Depot Supply task;
(3) To keep within the Group's allocated budget;
(4) To reduce the cost per unit of output by 2·5 per cent.;
(5) To complete the implementation of the Warehouse and Transport Management System by 31 March 1995.

Navy Training and Recruitment

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about possible defence agency status for the Royal Navy's training and recruiting organisation.

Mr. Hanley: I have decided that the Royal Navy's flag officer training and recruiting organisation, FOTR, should be considered as a candidate for defence agency status under the next steps initiative. FOTR currently employs 5,400 staff and has some 15 major training schools across the country. Of those 3,900 are service personnel who rotate between front-line operational appointments and the FOTR organisation, thus providing current knowledge, experience and expertise; the remaining 1,500 are civilians.

A "prior options" study of FOTR's organisation is being undertaken.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in the organisation would be welcome and should be sent, by 8 August, to:

Head of Naval Personnel Finance & Systems
2SL/CNH
Victory Building
HM Naval Base
Portsmouth PO1 3LS

VIP and Communications Flying

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of RAF VIP and communications flying.

Mr. Rifkind: Following the efficiency scrutiny undertaken last year, it has been decided that the Queen's flight, currently based at RAF Benson, will move to RAF Northolt to join the other RAF communications aircraft of No. 32 Squadron. Rationalisation into a single collocated unit, which will be known as 32 (The Royal) Squadron, will enable the RAF to continue to provide a flexible and cost-effective service to the royal family and the other VIP customers. The high standards associated with the Queen's Flight will be fully maintained. The new arrangements will include a new centralised tasking and monitoring organisation to ensure best use of all the assets available.

The bulk of the use made by the royal family of the Queen's flight is for national, ceremonial and other public duties where the cost falls to the MOD. Private use of the Queen's flight at MOD expense has been restricted to the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Queen Mother, and the Prince and Princess of Wales. Such use has been minimal. However, Her Majesty has indicated a wish in future that the MOD should be reimbursed for this use, and arrangements are being made accordingly.

Long-range VIP flying will for the time being continue to be undertaken by the RAF's VC10 fleet. However, the possibility of using an RAF Tristar remains under consideration.

Otterburn Training Area

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make details available of proposals for the development of the Otterburn training area.

Mr. Hanley: New developments within the Otterburn training area are required for training with AS 90 and MLRS—multiple-launch rocket system—equipments on their return from Germany under the Government's "Options for Change" programme.

Last year independent environmental consultants, RPS Clouston Ltd., were commissioned to consider proposals by my Department for Otterburn. Using their material, and advice provided informally by the Northumberland National Park Authority, the proposals have undergone a detailed scrutiny within my Department and have been significantly refined. I am now satisfied that these revised proposals are for the minimum development necessary to meet the Army's operational training requirements.

These development proposals are, of course, subject to planning approval, and as a first step in the public consultation process my Department will shortly be making arrangements for consultants to undertake a comprehensive environmental impact assessment. When this assessment has been completed and after careful consideration of any views put forward by the statutory bodies and other relevant parties, it is out intention to lodge a notice of proposed development with the Northumberland National Park Authority.

Because there are sensitive issues involved my Department will enter into an early dialogue with the Northumberland national park and Countryside Commission authorities to examine the issues in detail and recommend how a balance might be achieved between the requirements of national park policies and the Army's need for effective training.

Aircraft Collisions

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what legal actions were taken against his Department following the collisions between civil and military aircraft over Norfolk on (a) 9 August 1974 and (b) 29 February 1984; and what were the outcomes of the actions.

Mr. Hanley: My Department no longer holds records which might relate to the legal and claims aspects of either of these accidents.

Hawk Jets

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to monitor the use by Indonesia of British Hawk jets.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom could not monitor the use of these aircraft on a regular basis. But the Government have made clear their concerns and have received an assurance from the Indonesian Government that the Hawks will not be used against civilians. Staff from the British embassy in Indonesia regularly visit East Timor, as do representatives of various human rights organisations. We have no reports from these visitors of Hawk sightings there, either in the air or on the ground.

Flight Recorders

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider his Department's policy on fitting flight recorders to military aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's policy on fitting recorders to military aircraft remains that all new aircraft types shall be fitted with accident data recorders. The technical difficulties and costs in fitting ADRs to older aircraft types are such that this could be undertaken only as part of a major upgrade programme.

Mr. Paul Martin

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds Mr. Paul Martin was suspended from work; when he hopes to announce the results of his Department's inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Mr. Paul Martin was suspended from work, under departmental disciplinary regulations, pending the outcome of inquiries into the security implications of allegations of improper behaviour reported by a national newspaper. It is not the practice to announce the results of internal inquiries of this nature and I do not, therefore, intend to make a statement.

Tornado

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the RAF Tornado GR1/1A fleet will be equipped with thermal imaging airborne laser designator equipment; and what is the expected resultant increase in the requirement for night flying training by RAF Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: It is not our practice to release operational information such as that concerning the number of TIALD-equipped aircraft. There are no plans to increase night flying training in order to practice TIALD operations at night, since it should be possible to practice these within the current Tornado GR1 night flying training programme.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual requirement for live delivery of the JP233 weapon in the continuation training syllabus of combat-ready Tornado GR1 aircrew; and where the live firing is carried out.

Mr. Hanley: There is no annual requirement for live delivery of the JP233 weapon in the continuation training syllabus of combat-ready Tornado GR1 aircrew. Live firing is not carried out during training.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many confidential incident reporting system —CONDOR—reports have been received in each year since 1979 in which military pilots have reported narrowly avoiding hitting the ground.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 15 December 1993, Official Report, column 749.

Rapier Missile Launcher

Mr Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the operational function of the ground-to-air Rapier missile launcher that was stationed in the village of Great Stukely, Cambridgeshire, on 16 May; whether the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) was informed of its presence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Rapier missile launcher was stationed in Great Stukely, Cambridgeshire, on 16 May 1994 as part of a routine airfield defence training exercise. The office of the Prime Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon, was consulted prior to the deployment.

TREASURY

Football Clubs (Taxation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many Football Association Premier League clubs are under examination by the special compliance office of the Inland Revenue; if he will identify the clubs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much was recovered by the Inland Revenue from FA Premier League clubs following investigations in each of the last three financial years; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what efforts are being made to recover unpaid taxes from FA Premier League clubs.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue's special compliance office is conducting investigations into FA Premier League clubs. For reasons of confidentiality, to which football clubs are entitled as much as any other taxpayer, I am not able to provide details of these investigations or of any results which may have arisen from them.

Special Compliance Office

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was received by the Inland Revenue following investigations by the special compliance office in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Dorrell: Special compliance office investigations produced the following yield in the last three financial years:

1991-92	330·6
1992-93	387·4
1993-94	348·3

European Union (United Kingdom Contribution)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Union in (a) the calendar year 1995 and (b) the current year; and what was the actual net contribution in 1993.

Sir John Cope: The Government's estimates of the United Kingdom's net contribution to EC institutions for the calendar years 1993 and to 1994 are set out in the "Statement on the 1994 Community Budget" (Cm 2486), which was published in March this year. Our estimates for the calendar year 1995 will be published in next year's statement.

Alcohol (Illegal Imports)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many seizures of illegally imported alcohol were made by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise service in the last year for which figures are available; what was the total volume of these seizures; and how these figures compare with previous years.

Sir John Cope: During the year to 31 March 1994 Customs and Excise seized 790,169 litres of alcoholic drink in 1,866 seizures. Before the completion of the single market on 1 January 1993 only seizures of spirits were separately recorded as numbers of seizures of other alcoholic drinks were insignificant. Seizures recorded in the previous two financial years were: 1992-93, including first three months of the single market, 88,858 litres in 1,561 seizures; 1991-92, 73,956 litres in 3,132 seizures.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Contracting Out

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which local authorities have approached his Department for their views on the contracting-out of trading standards and/or environmental health enforcement; what proposals were made by those authorities; and what position his Department took on such proposals.

Mr. McLoughlin: There have been no such approaches.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and for the Department of Energy when it was a separate department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: My Department does not record centrally details of work undertaken in terms of its activity, and collection of this information would incur disproportionate costs.

Unfair Consumer Contracts Directive

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether full compliance costs assessments have yet been undertaken in connection with the implementation of the European Commission's unfair consumer contracts directive; what are the results of such assessments to date; what benefits this legislation will bring to United Kingdom industry; and how it furthers the Government's deregulation initiative.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 June 1994]: A compliance cost assessment is in the course of preparation following responses to my Department's consultation paper published last October. To the extent that it may call for improved standards in the drafting of consumer contracts the unfair contract terms directive should assist the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry. Political agreement on the directive was reached before the launch of the Government's deregulation initiative, but consistent with that initiative the Government secured the deletion of certain provisions which appeared likely to prove onerous to industry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes were (a) sought and (b) obtained to the early drafts of the EC unfair consumer contracts directive; and to what extent he now considers that the directive is helpful to United Kingdom industry.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 20 June 1994]: The text of the unfair contract terms directive at the time of its adoption by the Council of Ministers broadly met the United Kingdom's negotiating objectives. In particular, we secured the deletion of potentially onerous provisions regarding the law relating to sale of goods, and agreement that the annex of potentially unfair terms should not be a blacklist. To the extent that it may call for improved standards in the drafting of consumer contracts the directive should assist the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensions

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make further improvements to the war pensions scheme.

Mr. Hague: We have decided to introduce two improvements which will benefit two groups of war widows. First, from October, we will supplement to United Kingdom levels the pensions of New Zealand war widows resident in this country, who are British. They receive the lower New Zealand pension because their husbands served with the independent New Zealand forces, not with those of the United Kingdom.

Secondly, and also from October, we will improve the financial position of some Northern Ireland war widows. They are the widows of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment who died in service between 1 April 1974 and 31 March 1980 and whose attributable pension from the Ministry of Defence is not as much as the special payments made to pre-1973 war widows. We will top up the MOD pension to the level of the pre-1973 payment.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his further letter of 12 April to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter, reference POF(6) 3644/65, concerning a constituent.

Mr. Burt: I replied to the hon. Member today, and I am sorry for the delay.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Daylight Saving

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 598, what plans he has for the adoption of daylight saving.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our policy on future summer time arrangements, including whether to move to central European time, remains under consideration.

British National Party

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will refer the case of J. R. Edmonds of the BNP to the Court of Appeal in order that that court may impose a higher sentence in that case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has no powers to do so. Sections 35 and 36 of the Criminal Justice Act give the Attorney-General the power to refer unduly lenient sentences passed for certain offences in the Crown court to the Court of Appeal. The power applies to offences that are triable only in the Crown court and to those triable either way which have been prescribed by order made by the Secretary of State. The Home Secretary has made such an order in respect of offences of indecent assault, making threats to kill and child cruelty.

I understand that Mr. Edmonds was convicted of violent disorder. This offence does not fall within the scope of the Attorney-General's powers.

Police Negotiating Board

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the draft regulations which have been agreed at the police negotiating board and remain to be placed before the House and in each case the date when they were agreed at the PNB and the expected date when they will be placed before the House.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None, but I will write to the hon. Member.

Primates

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in establishing an EU register of primates held in breeding and research establishments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The idea of a primate register has not so far been taken up by our EU partners. I understand, however, that a European primate resources network, EUPREN, is in the process of being established by primate breeding and research centres in a number of member states, with the object of improving both the quality of primate research and the welfare of the animals concerned. I gather that the network will be an appropriate forum for the exhange of information on the availability of suitable animals.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the next survey of primates held in British laboratories is scheduled to take place;

(2) what percentage of primates held in United Kingdom laboratories are captive bred.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A survey in 1992 showed that approximately 80 per cent. of old world primates held in the United Kingdom laboratories were captive bred. In 1993 almost all old world primates imported for use in scientific procedures were captive bred. Most new world primates held here have been bred in United Kingdom.

No decision has yet been taken on the need for another survey.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which species of primate are covered by the term "larger primate", as referred to in the 1992 annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The term referred to old world primates, in particular macaques and baboons.

Animal Experiments

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by him to expedite the validation of the fixed dose method as a replacement for the LD50 test.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Holders of project licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are required to use the fixed dose procedure wherever this is acceptable to the relevant regulatory authority. In other cases licensees are encouraged to seek the agreement of the regulatory authority to use the FDP rather than the LD50 test. We are considering a recommendation from the Animal Procedures Committee that action be taken to encourage acceptance of data from tests conducted to current OECD guideline methods; these include the FDP.

Channel Islands

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints over the past five years have been received by his Department relating to the miscarriage of justice, defects in the legal system or failure to deal with crime promptly from (a) the Channel Islands and (b) Jersey.

Mr. Maclean: Letters are received each year from a few individuals in the Channel Islands or in the United Kingdom who are dissatisfied with some aspect of the criminal law or judicial system in the island in question or a court's decision in a particular case. No central record is kept of such letters, but the number of complainants is very small.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently being held in detention in police stations; what is the length of time of their detention in police stations and in total; and if he will present this information according to the nationality of the asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information now available, following the introduction of improved recording systems, shows that on 15 June 10 people who had at some stage claimed asylum were recorded centrally as detained in police stations under Immigration Act powers. The breakdown by nationality and total length of detention—all in police stations—was as follows:

	Detained
2 Turkish	5 days
1 Turkish	4 days
1 Algerian	3 days
1 Algerian	2 days
1 Indian	2 days
1 Turkish	1 day
1 Brazilian	1 day
1 Russian	detained on 15 June
1 Algerian	detained on 15 June

Non-payment of Debt

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were found guilty of non-criminal offences related to the non-payment of community charge or council tax and imprisoned for each period of six months since April 1990; what was the length of their sentences; and what was the average amount of the debt unpaid for the non-payment of which they had been found guilty.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the table. No information is available centrally regarding the amount of debt unpaid.

Receptions into prison service establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of community charge, April 1990 to March 1994

Six month period	Number received	Average sentence length (days)
April 1990 to September 1990	1	30
October 1990 to March 1991	9	29
April 1991 to September 1991	50	27
October 1991 to March 1992	119	27
April 1992 to September 1992	270	31
October 1992 to March 1993[1]	434	30
April 1993 to September 1993[1]	582	31
October 1993 to March 1994[1]	620	32

[1] Provisional figures.

Police Car Sirens

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the instructions issued to officers of the Metropolitan police regarding the use of police car sirens.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the Commissioner that guidance on the use of sirens is presently under review and that specific instructions are expected to be issued shortly. I shall place a copy of these in the Library when they are available.

Doncaster Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the performance targets for (a) the number of assaults on staff and (b) the number of assaults on prisoners set out in the contract to run Doncaster prison; and what the penalty will be if these targets are exceeded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 23 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the performance targets for the number of assaults on staff and prisoners at Doncaster prison.

The contract does not include targets for the number of assaults. There are, however, the following performance measures:

Assaults on staff—no more than 77 in the first year of operation.

Assaults on prisoners—no more than 148 in the first year of operation.

It is the intention of the Prison Service to reduce the figures after a review of performance at the end of the first year.

If these figures are exceeded, the contractor will have failed to deliver the contracted service and a financial remedy will be imposed against the contract.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each group in the last three months.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office is housed within buildings for which the Cabinet Office and the Treasury, respectively, have overall security responsibility. I accordingly refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the similar questions he addressed to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled People

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the number and percentage of registered disabled persons employed by the House of Commons; and what would be the number and proportion equivalent to the statutory quota.

Mr. Beith: I have been asked to reply, on behalf of the House of Commons Commission.

Of a total of 1,404 staff employed by the House of Commons Commission 16 are registered disabled persons; this represents 1·1 per cent. of the work force. The statutory quota, 3 per cent., for the current complement would be 42.

Upper Waiting Hall (Exhibitions)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 404, regarding applications for exhibitions of a parliamentary nature in the Upper Waiting Hall, on what criteria the Committee decides to exempt applications from ballot.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: In order to be considered for exemption from the ballot for exhibitions to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall a proposed exhibition must have a clear and direct connection with Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. This afternoon, I shall be travelling to Corfu for the European Council.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments do not send out a ministerial reply to letters from hon. Members.

The Prime Minister: It is for Ministers in each Department to decide the best way in which to reply to correspondence from hon. Members. Where the correspondence covers operational matters dealt with by an executive agency, the Minister may decide that it would be more appropriate and helpful for a reply to be sent by the agency chief executive, who has the detailed knowledge which the hon. Member is seeking, as well as the necessary delegated authority to take appropriate action. It is open to an hon. Member who is dissatisfied with a reply from an agency chief executive to raise the matter with the responsible Minister.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what alterations he will make in future financial years to lessen the effect of the south-east area cost adjustment on the comparative position of the south-west of England.

Mr. Curry: The area cost adjustment will be discussed with the local authority associations during the summer. The Government will be giving particular attention to the way that the adjustment tapers within the south-east region outside London. We will also give careful consideration to any new evidence which is brought forward on other aspects of the adjustment. We will announce our proposals for the 1995-96 local government finance settlement later in the year.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the criteria used to assess the suitability of data sources for use in standard spending assessment calculations.

Mr. Curry: The data sources used in the calculation of standard spending assessments are generally those which are compiled on a consistent basis across all relevant authorities, are judged to be reliable, are not affected by individual authorities' own decisions, and are as up to date as possible.

There is a continuing dialogue with the local authority associations about data sources which are capable of producing indicators relevant to, or indicative of, the variations in the need for local authority spending.

Farm Shops

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, columns 240-41, if he will make a statement about the Government's planning policy towards applications for farm shops in the green belt.

Mr. Baldry: Advice on development control matters within green belts is contained in planning policy guidance note 2. Paragraph 13 of that document states that approval should not be given, except in very special circumstances, for the construction of new buildings or for the change of use of existing buildings for purposes other than uses appropriate to a rural area.

It is for local planning authorities to take this advice into account, together with all other material planning considerations, including my answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 240, in making planning decisions concerning farm shops in green belts.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave in the Official Report on 26 April 1993, column 318, for a reference to those circumstances where a planning application for a farm shop may not be necessary.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from non-governmental organisations this year on environmental risks of (a) nuclear facility decommissioning and (b) the storage and processing of high-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Atkins: The Department received a copy of a report. "Consequence Analysis of a Catastrophic Failure of Highly Active Waste Tanks Serving THORP and Magnox Nuclear Fuel Reprocessing Plants at Sellafield", by Mr. Peter Taylor. The report was passed to the Health and Safety Executive, which regulates radioactive waste storage arrangements at nuclear licensed sites.

Cement Kilns

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assurances he proposes to provide to constituents in Rutland, Stamford, Ribble Valley and elsewhere about the protection of the environment during the burning of substitute fuel in cement kilns.

Mr. Atkins: Current authorisations of cement kilns provide for certain substitute fuels to be used in trial burning subject to the agreement of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. While each case will be considered on its merits, HMIP, using experience gained, will be requiring trials to be conducted on the following basis. No more such trials will be approved than are necessary to allow HMIP to determine what constitutes best available techniques not entailing excessive costs—BATNEEC—for operations by the cement manufacturing industry in these circumstances.

Before a trial commences, satisfactory baseline data on the normal operation of the cement manufacture will need to be provided to HMIP. These data will have to cover all of the aspects in the following paragraphs, in partiular including full details of the kiln and its operating characteristics, and of the emissions to the environment during normal operation.

Trials will be run in accordance with a schedule of conditions to be agreed in advance with HMIP. This schedule will be placed on the public register. Operators will be required to make on-going reports on the progress of all trials and in particular to clear with HMIP any reasons for slippage in the progress of any trial. HMIP's agreement will be needed to any proposals to use substitute fuels for longer periods than agreed in the trial schedule. Operators will be expected to discontinue any trial in the event of developments which might adversely affect the environment. For monitoring purposes, HMIP will impose an enhanced and stricter regime to meet the particular circumstances of the trials.

Only substitute fuel that can meet a suitable specification, agreed in advance with HMIP and covering, for example, chlorine, polychlorinated biphenyls, sulphur and heavy metals content, will be allowed to be used in the trials. All deliveries of the substitute fuel will be required to meet the agreed specification. Storage to an agreed standard and with adequate control systems will be needed for the substitute fuel. This may call, for example, for tank level indicators, suitable bunding of containment, instrumentation for controlling and measuring the flow of the substitute fuel, appropriate emergency cut-outs and other features.

HMIP will insist on being satisfied in advance of relevant aspects of the trial operations. Details of kiln operating characteristics covering, for example, temperatures in the kiln, percentage recycled electrostatic precipitator dust, oxygen concentration, fuel rate, trip history and feed rate, will need to be supplied to HMIP. Information on the EP make, number of zones, electrical details for each bank, temperature and carbon monoxide concentration will also be required.

The trials will be principally concerned with the testing and monitoring of releases. Continuous monitors for particulate matter, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide and oxygen, calibrated to the satisfaction of HMIP, will have to be installed before trials commence. Where emissions, for example, of hydrogen chloride, hydrogen fluoride and total organic carbon are concerned, it may be necessary for operators to hire or import continuous monitors or to use recognised test methods, all in agreement with HMIP. Other testing as specified by HMIP will be needed on the kiln feed, EP dusts, and clinker. The operator will be expected to undertake adequate local area monitoring. Operators will be required to make on-going returns of trial monitoring data to HMIP which, in accordance, with the requirements of the legislation, will enter them on the public register. HMIP will carry out independent testing to verify the results of the trials.

On completion of the agreed trials schedule, operators will be required to revert to routine manufacture not using substitute fuel. If, following completion of the trials, an operator wishes to use substitute fuels on a permanent basis he will have to apply for a variation of the existing authorisation. In this circumstance, the operator will have to provide HMIP with an assessment of the outcome of the trials to justify his proposals. If the proposed variation amounts to a "substantial change" to the process, the application will have to be advertised and be subject to consultation with statutory consultees and the public. The outcome of individual applications cannot be anticipated, but policy in principle will be to require appropriate improvements to the plant, in order to guard against adverse effects on the environment from the burning of substitute fuel.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the United Kingdom ambassador to the Yemen made in his meeting with the chairman of the Presidential Council in Sanaa.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In his meeting with President Saleh on 8 June, the British ambassador urged the President to comply with the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 924; in particular to agree to an immediate cease fire to allow dialogue to take place.

Western Sahara

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the United Nations voter identification programme for the referendum in the Western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations identification commission announced on 1 June that it had completed the preliminary analysis of applications for registration received so far, and was launching the identification and registration process both in Western Sahara and in the refugee camps in the Tindouf area.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what safeguards are being put in place by the United Nations to prevent Moroccan citizens from wrongly taking part in the Western Sahara referendum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Only those individuals identified and registered by the United Nations identification commission will be eligible to vote in the referendum. One of the duties of MINURSO will be to ensure the proper conduct of the referendum.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what stipulations have been made by the United Nations about residence and other qualifications to take part in the Western Sahara referendum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Security Council resolution 907 of 29 March 1994 endorses the criteria for eligibility to participate in the referendum proposed by the United Nations Secretary-General in his report to the Security Council of 28 July 1993—document 2/26185, available in the House of Commons Library.

North Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will agree to the Russian proposal for an international conference to discuss the Korean crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Russian proposal to hold a conference to discuss the security of the Korean peninsula is one of a number of responses to the situation currently being considered.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the United Nations proposed sanctions on North Korea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the Security Council we are consulting other member states on the timing, tactics and substance of council action, including the imposition of sanctions. We shall continue to consult the other states in the region.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the use of DNA examinations in Somalia for proposed entrants to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Somalis applying for entry clearance as dependants of those settled in the United Kingdom are eligible for DNA testing in the same way as other nationals. DNA tests will be offered free of charge, under the Government-sponsored scheme, to first-time applicants where the entry clearance officer has doubts about the claimed relationship at the time of the application. In 1993, 19 DNA tests were conducted in Addis Ababa on Somalis applying to join family in the United Kingdom for settlement, and seven in Nairobi.

The British embassy in Mogadishu is temporarily closed.

Pakistan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan in its capacity as a member of the Commonwealth to repeal discriminatory laws against women and offer equal opportunities for women in all fields.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We regularly urge the Government of Pakistan to ensure the protection of the human rights of all Pakistanis. The United Kingdom aid programme in Pakistan promotes the status of women, which is one of ODA's seven priority objectives.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan in relation to the ending of child labour and for a free and compulsory education system.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of Pakistan are aware of our expectation that they will meet their obligations as a signatory to the UN convention on the rights of the child, and enforce their own Bonded Labour Systems (Abolition) Act. The United Kingdom's aid programme in Pakistan includes assistance for children's education.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan on the ending of discrimination on the basis of religion, with particular reference to the law requiring indication of religion on the national identity card.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have frequently urged the Government of Pakistan to protect the constitutional rights of religious minorities. There is no current requirement in Pakistan for religious affiliation to be indicated on national identity cards.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan about equal rights for religious minorities in Pakistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have frequently urged the Government of Pakistan to ensure that the rights of religious minorities are protected, as the country's constitution requires.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan in relation to reports of recent human rights violations in Karachi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We regularly urge the relevant Pakistani authorities to safeguard human rights. On 11 May Her Majesty's deputy high commissioner in Karachi, along with other EU representatives, discussed the situation there with the Chief Minister of Sindh.

Visitors' Entry Clearance

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the practice for Ministers to write personally to hon. Members regarding the refusal of visitors' entry clearance; and if he will ensure that all correspondence from hon. Members to Ministers receive a ministerial reply.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Ministers reply personally to all Members on questions of policy affecting the entry clearance operation at our posts overseas but not on individual cases. Usually officials in the migration and visa correspondence unit write direct to hon. Members on factual inquiries about most visa cases.

These arrangements were described in my letter of 7 July 1993 to all hon. Members. It enclosed a guidance booklet "Representations by Members of Parliament in Visa and Immigration Cases". I am sending the hon. Member another copy of each.

Whaling

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the enlargement of the EU will have on the whaling industries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Of the four applicant states, only Norway has a whaling industry. As part of its terms of accession to the European Union, Norway agreed that its policy on whales will fully respect the European Community's existing legislation.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress being made in peace talks in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The talks continue, but agreement has still not been reached on the issue of UNITA's participation in Government. The Angolan Government broadly accepted compromise proposals from the mediators about which posts should be given to UNITA. But UNITA has not yet accepted them. We have urged UNITA to respond positively.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current military situation in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since February, there has been a rise in military activity by both the Government of Angola and UNITA forces. There is particularly heavy fighting around the cities of Kuito and Malanje, and Huambo has been bombed. This has resulted in an indefinite suspension of humanitarian relief flights. We have expressed concern to both parties and urged them to respect United Nations Security Council calls for all offensive military operations to cease.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the military authorities in Nigeria about the need to restore democratic Government; and what response he has had.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The presidency of the European Union made representations to the Nigerian Foreign Minister on 20 May, urging the military to take concrete steps towards a restoration of democratic civilian rule. The Foreign Minister gave assurances of the military's commitment to the national constitutional conference, due to begin on 27 June, and to hand over power.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports have been made by the United Nation's special envoy to Somalia about whether progress is being made in respect of a constitutional conference on the future of Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Secretary-General's special representative reports regularly to the Secretary General on the political, humanitarian and military situation in Somalia. These updates form the basis of the Secretary-General's reports to the Security Council. The last such report was on 24 May. The Secretary General's special advisers also brief Security Council members and troop contributors on developments.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Security Council resolution 923 of 31 May urged all parties to pursue negotiations aimed at achieving national reconciliation. We welcome the agreement signed on 18 June in Kismayo on reconciliation in the Lower Juba region. The international community are concerned at the continued delays in convening a national conference and hope that Somalis will build on the progress made in Kismayo to facilitate a national settlement.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Football Clubs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to set up an independent regulator for Football Association Premier and Football League clubs in England.

Mr. Sproat: No. It is a matter for the football authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will instigate an inquiry into the rules governing the financial arrangements of Football Association Premier League clubs.

Mr. Sproat: No.

Foreign Languages

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many candidates sat GCSE in a modern foreign language in 1993; and in what languages.

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of candidates in England who sat GCSE in a modern language in 1993 was 402,700. The languages, in order of popularity, were French, German, Spanish, Urdu, Italian, Bengali, Russian, Chinese, Panjabi, Gujarati, modern Greek, Arabic, Turkish, Japanese, modern Hebrew, Portuguese, Hindi, Polish and other languages not listed individually. The other languages include Irish, Esperanto and Ukranian.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many candidates sat A-level in a modern foreign language in 1993; in what languages; and what were the figures five years earlier.

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of candidates in England who sat GCE A-level in a modern foreign language in 1993 was 38,570 of which 26,170 were from schools. The languages, in order of popularity, were French, German, Spanish, Urdu, Italian, Chinese, Russian, Japanese, modern Greek, Panjabi, Bengali, Portuguese, Polish, Turkish, modern Hebrew, Dutch, Hindi and Danish.

No comparable figure is available for 1988, although 5,000 school leavers in 1987-88 sat a GCE A-level in a modern foreign language in that year.

Student Loans

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many students who graduated in (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991, (d) 1992 and (e) 1993 are still in debt to the Student Loans Company; and if he will make a statement:

(2) how many students applied for student loans in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Student Grants

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average grant received by students in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The average maintenance grants, excluding any payment for fees, received by mandatory award holders in England and Wales in the academic years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 are set out in the table. Since 1990-91 students have also had access to student loans.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Repetitive Strain Injury

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will discuss with the RSI group in north Staffordshire a research proposal to increase awareness and understanding of RSI.

Mr. Waldegrave: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its funding from the Office of Science and Technology within my Department.

I understand that the MRC is not currently supporting any research specifically into repetitive strain injury, but officials from the council are always willing to discuss and consider scientifically based, sound proposals. The prospects for funding of research into RSI will therefore depend on the nature and quality of any applications received.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the quality of the shipping communications to and from St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The issue of shipping communications links with St. Helena is a matter which is regularly under review with the St. Helena Government. Transport communications are clearly very limited, but there has been difficulty in identifying a cost-efficient means of strengthening it.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the acquisition of a shuttle ship for St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has decided that the search for a shuttle ship between St. Helena and Ascension Island should be discontinued for the time being. This decision, which was reached with great reluctance, followed an exhaustive four-year search, conducted with the assistance of specialist maritime consultants, which failed to identify a suitable vessel available at a cost that was not disproportionately expensive.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the wind electricity generation project for St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 24 February, at column 397.

We have asked the project consultants to carry out a survey of the world market for smaller-rated wind turbine generators and to report on their suitability for installation in St. Helena.

East Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the droughts and famines in each of the affected countries of east Africa; and how the Overseas Development Administration and the European Union are reacting to these needs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Food Programme estimates that up to 20 million people will be at risk from droughts and famine in 1994. Over 2·8 million tonnes of food aid will be needed. Britain has responded promptly. Since January, we have committed nearly 130,000 tonnes of food, including 46,500 tonnes announced by my noble Friend Baroness Chalker, the Minister for Overseas Development, on 22 June and £15 million of non-food emergency assistance. Figures for individual countries are as follows:

Food Aid (Metric Tonnes)

	Needs	United Kingdom	EC[1]
Eritrea	190,000	14,475	—
Ethiopia	955,000	45,000	264,000
Kenya	719,000	20,000	26,000
Somalia	343,000	—	800
Sudan	575,000	40,000	80,000
Tanzania	27,000	10,100	—
Uganda	24,000	68	—
Totals	2,833,000	129,643	370,800

Arms Sales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the means to ensure independence of decisions on British overseas aid from sales of arms.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British aid funds are not linked to the sale of arms. All bilateral project proposals are subject to economic, financial, technical and environmental appraisal before they are approved, to ensure that they meet the needs and priorities of recipient countries.

Albania

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what view Her Majesty's Government have about Greece vetoing a proposed EC loan to Albania; whether he will ensure that Her Majesty's Government support such assistance to Albania; if he will discuss the issue with representatives of the Greek Government; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been on removing the Greek Government's blockage on European Union aid to Albania.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the Commission proposal for macro-economic assistance to Albania in the form of a 35 mecu grant. We regret the delay in agreeing the Commission proposal and hope that the terms of this assistance will be agreed soon.

Brazil

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what environmental conditions are attached by the European Union or any of its specialist agencies in assistance given to Brazil for the development of the Greater Carajas project; and whether those conditions have been fulfilled to date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: EC assistance to the Greater Carajas project has been limited to a European Coal and Steel Community loan, since repaid, of 257 million ecu —£201 million—in 1982. This loan covered approximately 7 per cent. of the project's cost. There were no environmental conditions attached to the ECSC loan. The Carajas region is expected to benefit from environmental monitoring and protection measures under the pilot programme to conserve the Brazilian tropical rainforest which is being supported by the EC, the United Kingdom and other donors.

The Carajas project was discussed by the EC Development Council in November 1989. These and other discussions contributed to an EC resolution on Environment and Development that was adopted in 1992. The terms of that resolution are reflected in the legal framework for all EC aid to Latin America and in the 1992 co-operation agreement with Brazil.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he is making in the World bank negotiations with Brazil that any assistance to Brazil should be conditional upon the fulfilling of promises about the demarcation of land in the Amazon rain forest for indigenous peoples;

(2) whether the Brazilian Government have fulfilled the conditions regarding the demarcation of indigenous areas of first their World bank loan in 1982 which assisted with the development of Carajas projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom is not a party to negotiations between the World bank and Brazil on proposed lending. Bank staff are satisfied that all the conditions of the 1982 loan have been fully met.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by the European Union to co-ordinate the humanitarian response to the needs of Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the start of the crisis European Community humanitarian assistance to the region totals about £15·2 million, in addition to substantial amounts provided bilaterally by member states. Further support is being considered. Following a decision of the European Development Council a Troika mission will assess the situation by visiting neighbouring countries in early July.

Bangladesh

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Her Majesty's Government have allocated to overseas development in Bangladesh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain provided more than £65 million in aid to Bangladesh in the financial year 1992-93, the last year for which figures are available.

Our aid programme supports the development of Bangladesh's natural resources, its physical infrastructure and its human resources through health and family planning, education and training. We promote good government through our assistance with economic reform, and with projects to improve the efficiency and accountability of the civil service, parliament and the judiciary.

The establishment of a new aid management office in Dhaka in October 1992 has allowed us to focus our aid more effectively on Bangladesh's development priorities.

WALES

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage public sector landlords to provide disabled people with personal housing plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I expect publicly funded housing bodies dealing with disabled people fully to address their housing needs.

Birds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by estate, those occasions on which birds belonging to protected species have been found (a) shot, (b) poisoned or (c) otherwise illegally killed in each of the past five years; and what were the number of (i) prosecutions and (ii) convictions which have resulted.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of birds of protected species poisoned in Wales in each of the last five years is:

Year	Number of birds poisoned
1989	12
1990	2
1991	3

No information on poisonings is held by estate and none of the other information sought is held centrally.

Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number and total cost of merit awards currently made to consultants for each health authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for funding the cost of existing and new awards was devolved to health authorities in 1991-92. Information on the number and total cost of merit awards currently made to consultants for each health authority in Wales is not held centrally.

Rural Primary Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many rural primary schools with a pupil attendance of 30 or less there were in Wales in (a) 1973, (b) 1983 and (c) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available prior to 1976 and rural schools cannot be identified separately. Comparable data for the number of primary schools in Wales with up to 25 pupils on roll for 1976, 1985 and 1993 are given in the following table. Data on schools with up to 30 pupils are not readily available.

Number of schools

	January 1976	January 1985	January 1993
Number of pupils on roll
Up to 25	106	114	61
26 or more	1,853	1,682	1,636
TOTAL	1,959	1,796	1,697

Ambulance Service

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that in cases other than a major incident, as encompassed in "Welsh Affairs Circular (93)69", no chief ambulance officer or his staff shall release information to the press following a 999 call requiring the attendance of an ambulance at a serious road accident.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no central guidelines for the release of information, by chief ambulance officers, to the media in the event of a 999 call to a serious road accident. The national health service has an overriding responsibility to respect the confidential nature of the relationship with its patients and should not disclose personal information without the patient's consent, other than in the most exceptional of circumstances.

Infertility

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to clarify the position regarding the provision of fertility services in West Glamorgan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision of fertility services is a matter for West Glamorgan health authority, which will take into account need, competing demands and available resources.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what provision is made for infertility investigation in Mid-Glamorgan health authority.

(2) what is the provision for infertility treatment in Mid-Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision for infertility investigation and treatment is a matter for Mid Glamorgan health authority, which will take into account need, competing demands and available resources.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice Mid-Glamorgan health authority has sought from his Department as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice the South Glamorgan health authority has sought from her Department as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the differences in duration of fertility treatment between West Glamorgan area health authority area and South Glamorgan area health authority area;

(2) what waiting lists are maintained in each of the area health authority area in Wales for fertility treatment.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what provision is made for infertility treatment by the South Glamorgan health authority;

(2) what provision is made for infertility investigation as regards the South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision for infertility investigation and treatment is a matter for South Glamorgan health authority which will take into account need, competing demands and available resources.

Road Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which road schemes have been authorised in the last 10 years which had a negative net present value; and which road schemes in the last 10 years have been rejected at the public inquiry stage or beyond because they had a negative net present value.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Social Services

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for developing the inspection of social services in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In June 1993, I published a consultation document "Inspecting Social Services in Wales". This set out proposals for applying three key principles of the citizens charter—that inspectors should be independent of the services they inspect, that lay people should be involved in inspections, and that inspection reports should be accessible to the public.

I intend that during 1994 there should be clear and demonstrable progress, both nationally and locally, towards the wider implementation of the citizens charter principles.

The social services inspectorate for Wales has already made considerable progress. For some years its inspection reports have been available to the public. A small group is being established to advise on the social services inspectorate's inspection work; half its membership will represent service users, carers and wider lay interests, and half will be drawn from local authorities and providers of services in the independent sector. Since February 1994, inspection teams have begun to include lay assessors; inspection reports will take full account of their views and observations.

I propose to issue shortly, for a brief consultation, draft guidance on how the same principles should be applied to the work of "arms-length" inspection units in local authority special services departments.

The new guidance will give local authority chief executives the important role of commissioning independent annual reports on the work of inspection units. These reports will focus on whether units apply the same standards to both local authority and independent provision, and on how effectively local authorities respond when improvements are shown to be needed.

The guidance will call for a change in the composition of advisory committees for inspection units. By the end of 1994 the numbers of lay people unconnected with the authority should be increased so that they form a majority on advisory committees.

I intend, too, that during 1994 we will begin to see lay people involved in social services inspections, and their views reflected in inspection reports. It will not be possible to include lay people in every inspection, but there must be substantial lay involvement on a regular and continuing basis.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, by grade, the numbers of full-time academic staff funded by the further education budget for each further education college on 1 October in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The tables list the information requested for 1992 and 1993. The figures for years prior to this are not readily available.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources have been made available to (a) the North Eastern, (b) the Southern and (c) the South Eastern education and library boards in order to assist with the amalgamation of further education colleges in their respective areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The additional resources for administrative costs incurred by the board are as follows:

Board	1993-94 £	1994-95 £
(a) North-Eastern Education and Library Board	52,000	45,000
(b) Southern Education and Library Board	17,000	10,000
(c) South-Eastern Education and Library Board	17,000	10,000

In addition the Department of Education will adjust the boards' indicative allocation for premature retirement redundancy lump sums. These payments will not therefore be a charge on the boards' block grant.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what study his Department has made of the differential growth rates across colleges of further education; what measures he has taken or intends to take in order to reform the method of funding further education colleges in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: There has been no such study; nor are there any immediate plans for a new funding methodology. Measures have been taken to eradicate as far as possible historical imbalances in the allocation of resources to the education and library boards for further education.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by college, the number of redundancies, both voluntary and compulsory that have taken place in Northern Ireland during the following academic years between 1988-89 and 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Details are available only for further education lecturers who have been awarded premature retirement pensions on the grounds of redundancy since 1990:

Lecturers in the Youth Training Programme have not been included.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been made to the Belfast institute during the past two years from applicants wishing to undertake full-time higher education courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Belfast institute does not maintain an annual record of applications for higher education courses. The institute estimates that the applications received in each of the academic years 1992-93 and 1993-94 would be approximately 1,200 to 1,500.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resources were specifically allocated in order to fund general national vocational qualifications in schools and further education colleges in Northern Ireland during 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The resources allocated to fund GNVQs in Northern Ireland are related to the phased introduction of specific areas of study which were delivered mainly through the futher education sector. The additional funding allocated to further education in each of the academic years was:

Year	£
1993-94	71,000

Colleges could also draw, in 1993-94, on resources under the further education programme. £157,400 was allocated to the education and library boards to support curriculum development for specific vocational areas and £558,000 was allocated for staff development, where GNVQ was among the identified priorities.

Funding of £65,000 for 1994-95 is expected to be allocated to phase III of the GNVQ pilot when it is introduced in September 1994.

No specific additional funds have been provided to schools for GNVQ. Under local management of schools, schools wishing to develop new courses must do so from within their allocated budget. Those schools participating with colleges benefit from staff and curriculum development, resource materials and teaching time provided by the colleges.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by individual school and further education college the total budget allocated to each participating institution to fund GNVQs during (a) 1992-93, (b) 1993-94 and (c) 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Funding for GNVQs has been provided specifically for the pilot phases, which are being delivered mainly through the further education sector. Schools participating with the colleges benefit from staff and curriculum development, resource materials and teaching time provided by the colleges.

A list of schools and further education colleges with their budgets is as follows:

Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education (St. Patrick's High School participated in the pilot of Manufacturing)	13,000
North West Institute of Further and Higher Education (Thornhill College, Foyle and Londonderry College and St. Mary's School participated in the pilot of Business; St. Mary's High in Health and Social Care)	13,000
Castlereagh College of Further Education (Lagan College participated in the pilot of Business)	4,000
Total allocation	30,000
1993-94
Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education	30,000
North West Institute of Further and Higher Education	28,000
Castlereagh College of Further Education (Ashfield Boys and Girls High School participated in the pilot of Manufacturing)	3,500
Newcastle College of Further Education (St. Malachy's High School Castlewellan participated in the pilot of Manufacturing)	3,500
Northern Ireland Hotel and Catering College	6,000
Total allocation	71,000

Funding of £65,000 for 1994-95 is expected to be allocated by my Department when it is known which courses will be taken up by the colleges and schools in September 1994.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of temporary teachers paid on a daily rate who were employed by each college for periods longer than 26 weeks during each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows for each academic year:

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans his Department has to permit the Belfast Institute to provide full-time higher level courses in catering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I have discussed this issue with a delegation from the college led by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) and have agreed to consider it further when evidence of demand for such courses is provided.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the average unit of resource funding per further education student in Northern Ireland for each of the past five years; what was the average unit of resource funding for each trainee in a training centre for the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: It is only possible to calculate the average unit of resource funding per full-time equivalent further education student in Northern Ireland on an equitable basis since 1991. Capital costs and student grants are not included. Figures beyond 1992-93 are not yet available:

1992-93	2,311

I have been advised by the chief executive of the Training and Employment Agency that the average unit of resources funding for a trainee in a training centre, including capital costs and excluding the training allowances paid to individuals is:

1990-91	5,418
1991-92	5,826
1992-93	6,716
1993-94	5,499

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources have been made available to the Belfast education and library board in order to assist with the amalgamation of further education colleges; if he will provide a breakdown of these additional resources in relation to their specific purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: An additional £40,000 was provided in 1990-91 to support the secondment of four senior lecturers.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by college and by individual case the number of industrial tribunal and fair employment tribunal applications lodged against further education colleges for each year since 1989; how many cases have been upheld against the further education colleges and how many cases have resulted in a settlement which has involved payments being made by an education and library board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Government responded to the report of the review group in their statement of 9 February 1993. There are no plans for any further statements. Funding for the further education sector is determined in the light of available resources and relative priorities for expenditure.

The figures set out in the table list by year for Northern Ireland as a whole (i) the numbers of birds which the Department knows to have been shot, poisoned or illegally killed; (ii) prosecutions and (iii) convictions.

Building Regulations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce new building regulations or amend existing building regulations, to promote the development of barrier-free housing in terms of (a) new build and (b) renovated or modernised properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment intends, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales to consult on a range of building regulation provisions which could be applied to the design of new dwellings for the benefit of disabled people.

Northern Ireland maintains its own building regulations and I will bring forward proposals, once the new requirements for England and Wales are known.

There are no plans to consider the applications of such requirements to existing dwellings subject to renovation or modernisation.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to encourage public sector landlords to provide disabled people with personal housing plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The administration of public sector housing, including assessment of need, is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. For special needs groups, the Housing Executive co-operates with the relevant health and social services area board to determine the most suitable accommodation and care, including the design or adaptation of dwellings, to meet the specific needs of the disabled occupant.

The Housing Executive also provides a range of services to disabled people and carries out approximately 7,400 major and minor adaptations per year.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of Northern Ireland's housing stock is constructed or adapted to meet the needs of physically disabled people at the latest date for which information is available; if he will break this information down into categories of housing tenure; what plans he has to enhance the availability of such housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Smith: The information is not available in the form requested. I have, however, been advised by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the 1991 house condition survey indicates that 80 per cent. of tenures in the owner-occupied, Housing Executive and housing association sectors provided at least level access to one entrance while for the private rented sector the figure is 63 per cent., and 30 per cent. of all tenures provide both level access and all facilities on the same level.

Since 1985 all new Housing Executive and housing association properties have been built to mobility standard on the ground floor to facilitate elderly and disabled people.

The Executive and housing associations normally carry out around 7,500 major and minor adaptations to dwellings each year. The Executive also expects to provide assistance to the private sector through approximately 3,000 applications for disabled facilities grants and minor works grants each year.

Public Houses

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many licensed public houses there have been in Northern Ireland for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number
1984	1,845
1985	1,832
1986	1,783
1987	1,735
1988	1,733
1989	1,700
1990	1,684
1991	1,695
1992	1,665
1993	1,643

Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number and total cost of merit awards currently made to consultants for each health authority in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The number of distinction and meritorious service awards currently made to consultants in Northern Ireland is:

	Number
A+	8
B	60
Total	232

The total cost of distinction and meritorious service awards made to consultants in the 1992-93 financial year is as follows:

	1992-93 £
Eastern Health and Social Services Board	1,856,823
Northern Health and Social Services Board	267,694
Southern Health and Social Services Board	254,089
Western Health and Social Services Board	243,289
Total	2,621,895

Community Services

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent by each district council in Northern Ireland on community services in 1993-94; and how much was spent per head of population in each district.

Mr. Ancram: As the 1993-94 accounts of the district councils have not been finalised, the information is not available at present.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of persons serving in the Royal Ulster Constabulary, as at 1 May in the ranks of (a) constable, (b) sergeant, (c) inspector, (d) chief inspector, (e) superintendent and (f) chief superintendent; and if he will give the numbers in each rank who are believed to be CB1 (Protestant origin), CB2 (Roman Catholic) and CB3 (other).

Sir John Wheeler: The number of persons serving in the Royal Ulster Constabulary by rank and perceived community background is collated annually. The following statistics relate to 31 December 1993.

Rank	Number of officers	CB1	CB2	CB3
Constable	6,232	5,575	454	203
Sergeant	1,408	1,261	123	24
Inspector	489	427	45	17
Chief Inspector	164	140	22	2
Superintendent	123	103	17	3
Chief Superintendent	42	34	7	1

Paramilitary Groups

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of persons suspected of being loyalist paramilitary members and those suspected of being republican paramilitary members who were arrested in each police sub-division between July 1992 and May 1993; how many in each category were subsequently charged; and what were the figures in each case for the period July 1993 to May 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: The available information is for the whole of Northern Ireland and is as follows:

Date	Total arrests	Suspect loyalists charged	Suspect republicans charged
1 July 1992 to 31 May 1993	1,531	208	233
1 July 1993 to 31 May 1994	1,638	149	132

A breakdown by police sub-division, and information on how many of the individuals arrested were suspected members of loyalist or republican groups, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

United Nations 50th Anniversary

Sir James Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he is proposing to make to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the United Nations in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: None at present.

SCOTLAND

Rent Registration Service

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of rents asked for by the landlords and the level of rents determined by the rent officers in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Member is seeking information on the total sum of rents claimed by landlords and the total sum of rents determined by the rent registration service. In the case of rents determined for housing benefit subsidy, it was estimated on the basis of a 90 per cent. sample of cases recorded for 1993, that the total sum of rents referred to the rent registration service was around £145 million and the total sum of rents determined was around £131 million. Similar information relating to the determination of fair rents is not available.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to exclude cartels of private landlords from submitting tenders under market testing of the rent registration service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: If market testing takes place, each bid will be considered on its merits to ensure that there is no conflict of interest. The Secretary of State would need to be satisfied that this had been addressed so that any risk of bias on the part of a potential contractor is eliminated. Otherwise the particular bid would be excluded from the tender evaluation process.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to safeguard (a) private sector tenants and (b) the public purse from rents being raised following a successful bid for running the rent registration service being accepted from an organisation other than the current service provided by civil servants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All the existing legislation which applies to the determination of rents by rent officers would continue to apply to any rent registration service providers that might be appointed. This would include provision for appeals to rent assessment committees on fair rents and the existing powers of the courts.

Road Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which road schemes have been authorised in the last 10 years which had a negative net present value; and which road schemes in the last 10 years have been rejected at the public inquiry stage or beyond, because they had a negative net present value.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The roads directorate records show that in the last 10 years three road schemes authorised between 1985 and 1988 had an estimated small negative net present value. These schemes are listed below:

(1) A75 Dumfries Bypass
(2) A90 (A94) Parkford—Balnabreich
(3) A90 (A94) Upper North Water Bridge—Oatyhill.

Post-evaluation studies on outturn costs and benefits have been completed on the first two schemes which show a significant positive net present value.

There have been no road schemes in the last 10 years which have been rejected at the public inquiry stage or beyond, because they had a negative net present value.

Betting and Gaming

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will bring forward proposals to allow payment of prizes from amusement-with-prizes machines to be made in cash, rather than replayable tokens.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This matter is under review.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the levels of investment by Scottish Enterprise, including its offshoots, and each local enterprise company in each parliamentary constituency in Scotland since 1990; if he will also give details of legally committed and planned expenditure by each on the same basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The information sought by the hon. Member is not available on a parliamentary constituency basis.

Strathclyde Police

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in relation to policing in the 'K' divisions of Strathclyde police following local government reform; if it will be possible for this police division to remain as an operational unit in the event that the new local authorities' areas dissect its boundaries; what decision-making mechanisms will determine whether the division will remain as an operational unit; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The policing of particular divisions of police forces is an operational matter for which the relevant chief constable is responsible. Decisions relating to the divisional boundaries within forces following local government reform will be a matter for chief constables and police authorities.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a feasibility study into the need for an operational police station within the Gleniffer division of Strathclyde regional council; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The need for operational police stations and their locations are matters for the police authority and the chief constable to decide.

Warrant Sales

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to abolish warrant sales as a means of collecting debt; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Warrant sales act as an ultimate sanction within a range of remedies available to the creditor for recovery of all types of debt. The system of warrant sales was reformed by the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987. These reforms removed the most resented and harsh aspects of the procedure. The Government have no plans at present for further major reform of these arrangements.

Paper Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what economic initiatives he is supporting which will encourage the development of paper processing and treatment as an industry; and if he will make a statement on the importance of the paper and board industry to Scotland in general, and Renfrewshire in particular.

Mr. Stewart: The paper industry in Scotland has access to a wide range of advice and assistance from the Scottish Office and the enterprise network. Advice is available on, for example, exports, technology and best management practice; and regional selective financial assistance may be available for capital investment projects in assisted areas such as Renfrewshire.

The latest census of employment shows that, in 1991, the paper and board industry in Scotland employed 12,450 people, of whom 270 were employed in Renfrewshire. The industry makes an important contribution to the Scottish economy.

Physiotherapy

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for physiotherapy services in each of Scotland's health board areas.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not collected centrally.

Voter Registration

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in obtaining information on how many British citizens living overseas are registered for voting in each constituency in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the information I gave in answer to his question on 3 February 1994. My understanding is that information is intended to be published by OPCS in the late summer.

Gateside School, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has available on the provision of special needs education at Gateside school, Paisley; how many pupils attend the school; what is the current catchment area of the school; what proportion of children are transported to the school because they do not reside within its vicinity; how much the school cost to run in the most recent year for which figures are available; what was the annual cost per pupil in the same financial year; how many (a) teaching, (b) specialist, (c) auxiliary, (d) administrative and (e) manual staff are employed at the school; how many posts are currently unfilled; what is the reason for each unfilled post; what are the grades and designations of the unfilled posts; where is the nearest alternative school providing similar educational services to a similar age group; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Strathclyde regional council education authority has responsibility for Gateside school which provides for pre-five children with hearing impairment. In September 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, the school roll was 19 and two full-time teachers were employed. All children attended on a part-time basis, the full-time equivalent being 14. The total budgeted running cost for 1993-94 was £101,000 which equates to a budget cost per pupil of £7,210. The other information requested is not held centrally.

The Government's policy is that parents in Scotland of children with special educational needs should have a choice of educational provision for their child, including special schools such as Gateside. It is, of course, for each education authority to support and arrange such provision for children in their area with special educational needs.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding is made available by his Department to Gateside school for deaf children in Paisley; how funding arrangements will change in future years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office does not fund Gateside school directly. The level of expenditure incurred in respect of the school is a matter for the education authority, Strathclyde regional council, which receives support for its expenditure on education services through aggregate external finance. There are no plans to change the existing arrangements.

Police Salaries

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the salary range of each rank of police officer in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current salaries of police officers, by rank, are as follows:

[2] Chief constables who were in post on this population band at the time of the agreement on the 1984 pay review received a personal salary supplement of £500 (pensionable) while they remained in their present posts; this is increased to £954 with effect from 1 September 1993.

Lace Manufacturing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what economic initiatives he is supporting to encourage the development of the lace manufacturing industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement on the importance of this industry to Scotland in general, and Renfrewshire in particular.

Mr. Stewart: The lace industry in Scotland has access to a wide range of advice and assistance from the Scottish Office and the enterprise network. The industry has derived particular benefit from the Scottish Lace Guild, which was established in 1991 with assistance from Scottish Enterprise and Enterprise Ayrshire.

The latest census of employment shows that, in 1991, the lace industry in Scotland employed 490 people, all of whom were employed in Ayrshire. The industry makes a useful contribution to the economy of that area; I am not aware that the industry has a significant presence in Renfrewshire.

Emergency Services

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to bring forward legislation to deal more effectively with hoax calls to the emergency services; if he intends to take any additional action within his current range of powers to deal with this menace; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to bring forward further legislation in respect of such calls, the making of which is already an offence. Means of dealing with this problem are kept under review, and there is evidence that the frequency of hoax calls is diminishing.

Regional and European Elections

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what individual amounts are payable to (a) returning officers, (b) deputy returning officers, (c) presiding officers at polling stations, (d) polling clerks, (e) supervisors at election counts, (f) counting clerks and (g) other grades for their duties relating to both the regional council and European elections in 1994; if he will publish a table showing the amount paid or due to be paid in respect of each of these elections to each returning officer and deputy returning officer in Scotland; what costs returning officers and deputy returning officers are required to meet from these payments; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no locus with regard to the payments made to returning officers and their staffs at regional elections. Such payments are the responsibility of the authorities concerned.

With regard to the 1994 European parliamentary elections, the amounts payable to returning officers and their staffs are contained in The European Parliamentary Elections (Returning Officers' Charges) Order 1994 (SI 1994/1379) which came into force on 1 June 1994. The costs to be met by returning officers in running the elections are also set out in this order. Details of the information needed to calculate amounts payable to individual returning officers have not yet been forwarded to the Scottish Office Home and Health Department by the returning officers concerned.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average time that patients wait for the results of cervical smear tests in each health board area.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 11 February 1994 at columns 417-18, and the replies that I gave the hon. Member for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Donohoe), Official Report, 21 January, column 759, 3 February, column 929, and 4 February, column 962.

School Meals

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children received free school meals in each year since 1990; how the rules governing eligibility to free school meals have been amended over that period; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested, taken from annual school meals census returns, is as follows:

Pupils receiving free school meals

	Numbers
1990	99,303
1991	101,915
1992	107,186
1993	107,709

There have been no changes in the entitlement to free meals since 1990.

Urology Services

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for urology services in each of Scotland's health board areas.

Mr. Stewart: The information is shown in the table:

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of Scotland's housing stock is constructed or adapted to meet the needs of physically disabled people at the latest date for which information is available; if he will break this information down into categories of housing tenure; what plans he has to enhance the availability of such housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 31 March 1993, there were 23,184 public authority and housing association dwellings built or adapted for physically disabled people, 2·6 per cent. of the public sector stock. Information on private sector provision is not available centrally.

The draft housing and community care circular, issued for comment in February, restates the Government's guidelines on housing for physically disabled people. A letter seeking views on the topics to be covered in a consultation paper on the extension of access requirements in the building regulations to new dwellings has recently been issued to outside bodies.

Slingshots and Catapults

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to ban the sale of slingshots and catapults; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce legislation to ban the sale of slingshots and catapults. The sale of a range of dangerous items which have no apparent legitimate use is already banned under the Offensive Weapons Order 1988. Catapults are sold for legitimate use by anglers and farmers.

Health Service, Central Legal Office

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish Laurence Peterken's review of the Scottish health service central legal office;

(2) what was the remit of Laurence Peterken's review of the Scottish health service central legal office; and what investigations he has carried out.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 20 June 1994]: Mr. Laurence Peterken has been appointed as special projects director reporting to the chief executive of the management executive. His remit is to undertake an organisational and functional review of the divisions which comprise the Common Services Agency. In reviewing the central legal office his fact-finding included interviews with NHS trusts, boards, private solicitors, and senior management of the CSA and CLO. His findings and recommendations in respect of the central legal office have been reported to the chief executive.

Any decision on the future of the central legal office will be a matter for my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State. It is not the practice to publish advice given to Ministers.

Nursing Homes, Lanarkshire

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many staff are employed in the inspection of private nursing homes in the Lanarkshire health board area;

(2) how many licensed private nursing homes there are in the Lanarkshire health board area;

(3) on how many occasions each of the licensed private nursing homes in the Lanarkshire health board area has been inspected since it was opened.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 June 1994]: An assistant chief area nursing officer is employed exclusively on nursing home inspection duties and has access to a full administrative service and other medical, pharmaceutical and additional specialist nursing input, as required.

There are 50 registered nursing homes within the Lanarkshire health board area, all of which are inspected at least twice annually.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the effect on the council tax's single person discount when responsibility for water and sewerage charges is taken away from local government under the Government's proposals.

Sir Hector Monro: The restructuring of water and sewerage services will not affect the availability of council tax discount for single adult households.

HEALTH

Appointments

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what proportion of (a) chairmen, (b) chief executives and (c) board members of (i) regional health authorities, (ii) district health authorities and (iii) NHS trusts are women.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest information available centrally is given in the table.

Chairman and non-executive appointees

	Number of women appointed	Women as a percentage of total appointees
Regional health authorities
Chairmen	1	12·5
Non-executive members	19	47·5
District health authorities
Chairmen	26	24·1
Non-executive members	228	38·4
NHS Trusts
Chairmen	104	26·0
Non-executive directors	795	40·4

Information about the number of female chief executives employed is not available centrally.

London Implementation Group

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the NHS budget for the area covered by the London Implementation Group for (a) 1991-92, (b) 1992-93, (c) 1993-94 and (d) 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: Residents of London benefit from spending from the total national health service budget by the Department of Health, regional health authorities, district health authorities and family health services authorities. It is not possible to apportion Department of Health and regional health authority spending geographically and consequently it is not possible to give a figure for the NHS budget for this area.

NHS Budget

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the NHS budget for England in (a) 1991-92, (b) 1992-93, (c) 1993-94 and (d) 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: Gross national health service spending for England is shown in the table for the years requested.

1991-92	26,809
1992-93	29,387
[1]1993-94	30,520
[2]1994-95	31,970

[1] Estimated outturn.
[2] Current provision.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will introduce a system of performance management for mental health review tribunals, including a mechanism for the feedback to tribunal members concerning the outcome for patients they have discharged from their sections under the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Bowis: The work of mental health review tribunal members in England is monitored by the eight regional chairmen of the tribunals. This was described in the tribunal's annual report for 1993, a copy of which is available in the Library. Regional chairmen have agreed that it would be useful for members to know more about the outcome for patients whom they discharge and the Department is commissioning research into this and into decision making by tribunals.

Health Campaigns

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of staff employed, and number of inquiries received, in connection with her Department's campaign on (a) "Keep Warm, Keep Well" and (b) Health Service and Professional Recruitment.

Mr. Sackville: Four departmental staff are responsible for the "Keep Warm, Keep Well" campaign, among their wider duties, including its policy and publicity aspects. There were 31,775 requests for the 1993-94 information booklet. A "winter warmth" freephone helpline is run on the Department's behalf by the Help the Aged and is manned by 5·94 staff—whole time equivalent. The helpline received 24,574 inquiries in the period 14 October 1993 to 31 March 1994.

During 1993 the health service's professions recruitment campaign generated 11,538 requests for information. A nursing officer co-ordinates the campaign drawing on advice from departmental colleagues as required.

"Making London Better"

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed in the clearing house referred to in paragraph 4.46 of the departmental report to assist staff displaced as a result of the changes brought about by "Making London Better"; what is the total budget of the clearing house; and how many requests for assistance it has received.

Dr. Mawhinney: The clearing house employs five staff and the total budget for 1994-95 is £212,000. To date the clearing house has received 425 requests for assistance from individuals displaced as a result of service changes in London. Additionally, the clearing house deals with an estimated 70 inquiries per day relating to the clearing house scheme.

Obstetric Cholestasis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of still births that arise as a result of the condition known as obstetric cholestasis both in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1986 and 1992 there were no cases of stillbirths registered in England and Wales with obstetric cholestasis or intrahepatic cholestasis of pregnancy mentioned as a cause on the certificate.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and Learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

The causes of stillbirths are not collected centrally by the World Health Organisation. Individual countries abroad will need to be consulted for information about stillbirths attributed to ICP.

Disabled People (Employment)

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the level of compliance of each health authority in England and Wales with the requirements of the statutory quota scheme for the employment of disabled persons.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest figures were published in the April 1993 Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Clinical Standards

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information sources are currently available to purchasers to enable them to assess clinical effectiveness.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are various sources of information on clinical effectiveness currently available, including "Effective Health Care" bulletins, high quality clinical guidelines, the health outcomes clearing house, the Cochrane database and the results of clinical audit. Copies of the bulletins and guidelines are available in the Library.

Paediatric Cardiac Surgery

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available on the clinical performance and effectiveness of different treatment centres in relation to paediatric cardiac surgery.

Mr. Sackville: The information currently available centrally is from routinely collected data such as the annual hospital episode statistics prepared by the Government Statistical Service, copies of which are available in the Library. The Department is considering a recently received application for funding of a pilot study for clinical audit of paediatric and adult surgical procedures in cardiothoracic centres.

General Practitioners (Suicides)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners committed suicide in (a) 1973, (b) 1983 and (c) 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available centrally.

Clinical Effectiveness

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will identify those elements of the NHS executive dataset health service indicators which relate to measurement of clinical effectiveness.

Dr. Mawhinney: The health service indicators dataset contains over 500 indicators covering a wide range of national health service activities. Many of the indicators are related to clinical effectiveness, for example, indicators relating to "The Health of the Nation", outcomes, mortality and hospital activity can be used in conjunction with other relevant sources of information to examine the question of clinical effectiveness. Copies of the health service indicators are available in the Library.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available on the clinical performance and effectiveness of different treatment centres in relation to the most common cancers.

Mr. Sackville: In contracting for cancer services health authorities will wish to assess the performance of hospitals and other providers of cancer services. Comparative data are not available centrally.

The recently published consultative document entitled "A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services" recommends that cancer registration and careful monitoring of treatment and outcomes is essential. Copies of the document will be placed in the Library.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measurements currently exist to audit the clinical performance of GPs; how these are implemented and with what consequences; and what further measures are proposed.

Dr. Mawhinney: As independent practitioners, general practitioners review their own performance through the process of clinical audit. Our view is that audit priorities are best determined locally by individual GP practices, in the light of local requirements. To assist this, we have made funds available through family health services authorities in each year since 1991 to enable all practices to participate in clinical audit.

Public Bodies

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members there are of (a) special health authorities, (b) trusts boards, (c) district health authorities, (d) family health service authorities and (e) regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

	Chairman	Non-executives
Special health authorities	11	179
National health service trusts	419	2,057
District health authorities	112	560
Family health services authorities	90	810
Regional health authorities	8	40

Care Charges

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued on charging users or their carers for (a) domiciliary care, (b) day care, or (c) respite care provided by local authorities.

Mr. Bowis: Guidance about charging for non-residential social services for adults—LAC(94)1—was sent to local social services authorities in January. A further more detailed advice note was subsequently issued.

The Department has also issued the "Charging for Residential Accommodation Guide".

Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Children's Homes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) children's homes and (b) inspectors of children's homes there are in (i) Wales, (ii) Scotland, (iii) England, (iv) Northern Ireland and (v) the United Kingdom as a whole; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The number of children's homes in each country is shown in table (a). The total for the United Kingdom is not given because the available figures relate to different years.

The number of inspectors of children's homes is not routinely collected centrally. However, the total number of inspectors in each country in 1992-93 is shown in table (b). They do not all have specific responsibilities for the inspection of children's homes.

Table (a) Number of children's homes

	Local Authority	Voluntary	Private	Total
(i) Wales[1]	53	5	n/a	58
(ii) Scotland[2]	116	37	n/a	153
(iii) England[3]	950	170	180	1,300
(iv) Northern Ireland[4]	21	13	n/a	34

[1] From "Activities of Social Services Departments: Year ended 31 March 1992" published by the Welsh Office. The number of private homes is not available.
[2] From Statistical Bulletins SWK/SC/1994/1 "Services for Children 1991 and 1992" published by the Scottish Office. Figures relate to 1 992, the number of voluntary homes includes private homes.
[3] From "Choosing with Care" (The Warner Report) published by the Department of Health. Figures relate to 1992.
[4] Unpublished data from Health and Social Service Boards at 31 March 1993.

Table (b) Total number of inspectors

	Local Authority	SSI
(i) Wales	n/a	8
(ii) Scotland	84	20
(iii) England[1]	1,139	98
(iv) Northern Ireland	n/a	n/a

[1] Figures for local authority inspectors in England relate to staff in 106 local authorities out of 109 which responded to a survey for "Raising the Standard"—the second annual report of the Chief Inspector, Social Services Inspectorate. The figure for the Social Service Inspectorate (SSI) is also taken from this report.

Residential Homes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) registered nursing homes and (b) inspectors of registered nursing homes there are in (i) Wales, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Northern Ireland, (iv) England and (v) the United Kingdom as a whole; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: On 31 March 1993 there were:
380 registered nursing homes in Wales;
437 in Scotland
245 in Northern Ireland; and
5,190 in England; This gives a total of

6,252 in the United Kingdom as a whole.

The figures for Scotland and England include all institutions registered under the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 and the Registered Homes Act 1984 respectively. This includes private hospitals as well as nursing homes.

There are no centrally available figures for the numbers of nursing home inspectors for England and Scotland but there were 17 in Wales and 21·5—whole-time equivalents—in Northern Ireland on 31 March 1993.

Prostheses

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all hip prostheses currently purchased by the NHS together with their (i) volume and (ii) value for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of full-time equivalent staff employed in (a) 1989 and (b) 1993 in each health authority in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information for 1989 will be placed in the Library. The information for 1993 is not yet available.

Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding her Department provides for research into Creutzfeldt Jakob disease; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and the Scottish Office fund research carried out at the United Kingdom Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease surveillance centre in Edinburgh. The unit will receive a total of £179,000 from the Department of Health in the current financial year.

Dentistry

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of children aged under 16 years are registered with a dentist in each family health service authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will restore free dental examinations for all patients;

(2) what plans she has to raise the proportion of dental treatment costs paid by patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The level of patient charges is always kept under review.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the amount which will be raised by dental charges in the current year; what amount is raised from dental check-ups; and how much would be raised by increasing to 100 per cent. the proportion of charges paid by patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The 1994 estimates anticipate income from patient charges in the general dental services in England at £398 million, net of refunds. We estimate that about £60 million of this total will be derived from charges for dental examinations. Assuming no change in the volume of national health service dental treatment or the curent maximum charge level, raising the proportional charge to 100 per cent. would raise between £90 and £100 million in additional charge income in a full year, at current prices.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to the patient of a course of dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: We estimate that the average cost to a patient who paid the full national health service charge was £19·78, and to a patient who received partial remission from NHS charges £14·10.

Administration Budgets

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 380, regarding NHS budgets, if she will detail on what the total administrative budget, excluding staffing costs, was expended in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's administrative budget, excluding staff, covers a wide range of essential costs, including buildings—rent, maintenance, fuel and utilities, security, cleaning and other office services; meetings of expert advisory committees and working groups, conferences, seminars and publications; payments to other Government Departments, for example, to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for collection of statistics; consultancy, and staff training and travel.

Abortion

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 126, regarding legal abortions in respect of women living in the Channel Islands, how many women have had legal abortions otherwise than in England in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: In 1990, 1991 and 1992 there is no record of legal abortions in either Scotland or Wales to women usually resident in the Channel Islands.

Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to introduce legislation to merge district health authorities and family health service authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: We intend to introduce legislation to enable the merger of district health authorities and family health services authorities as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to introduce legislation to abolish regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 March at column 416.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has undertaken into the effectiveness of the drug Beta Interferon in treating multiple sclerosis.

Mr. Bowis: The Department is currently discussing this matter with interested parties, including the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

NHS Internal Market

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the degree of private sector involvement as providers of services in the national health service internal market.

Mr. Sackville: The extent to which national health service purchasers contract with the private sector is a matter for local decision. National health service purchasers are expected to purchase healthcare as efficiently and effectively as possible—from the public or private sector—to ensure good quality and best value for money.

Hospital Performance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that league tables measuring comparative hospital performance are weighted to take account of the make-up of the local communities which they serve.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Functions Analysis Groups

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she received the reports of the functions analysis groups; and if she will place copies of them in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney: Final reports from the 12 functions groups were received on 31 March. A summary of the groups' findings will be made available in due course.

Hospital Performance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish her Department's guide to hospital performance.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Mr. Sykes) on 24 May at column 121.

Liposuction Surgery

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received alleging negligence during liposuction surgery.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 18 May 1994, c. 517]: I regret that my previous reply was incorrect. It should read as follows:

"None. Complaints of medical negligence are the responsibility of health authorities and trusts who are liable by law for the negligence of their staff in the course of their national health service employment."

TRANSPORT

Rail Salaries

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now list the salaries for 1994-95 for (a) the chairman of British Rail and (b) the chairman of Railtrack; and if he will express the salaries as a percentage of the 1993-94 salaries.

Mr. Freeman: Their 1994-95 salary rates have not yet been determined.

Roadworthiness Checks

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by location the roadside checks carried out by the Vehicle Inspectorate in the last financial year and the number of vehicles checked; and if he will list the number of immediate prohibitions, delayed prohibitions and defect notices issued at each roadside check.

Mr. Key: The table gives a breakdown by region. It is not practical to give a breakdown by location.

Region	Vehicles and trailers examined	Immediate prohibitions	Delayed prohibitions	Defect notices
North East	28,763	1,951	1,657	3,527

Small Bus Permits

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many spot checks were carried out by the Vehicle Inspectorate on operators of minibuses covered by small bus permits in each of the last five years.

Mr. Key: This information is not available.

Vehicle Registration Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 83, what account was taken in the vehicle registration office review of the needs of disabled people.

Mr. Key: The review of DVLA's vehicle registration office network took account of the interests and requirements of all the networks' customers including disabled people. Their specific interests were presented to the review team by the representative of the Council for the Disabled.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 80, if he will update the estimated cost to date of the review of the vehicle registration office and the budget set aside for the review.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on Tuesday 14 June 1994, at column 520.

DVLA Management Structure

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 4, how DVLA's senior structure was reviewed and revised in order further to improve the management of the organisation; if he will list the improvements resulting from the changes; and what was the cost of reviewing and revising the structure.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 3 May 1994, Official Report, column 468. The agency's senior structure was reorganised into functional groups responsible for operations, strategic planning and development, and support services. The new structure is more focused, has sharpened decision making and reduced costs. The fees and expenses paid to Price Waterhouse were the only significant direct cost of the review.

Highways Agency

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost to the Department of providing hospitality for those civil servants moving to the Highways Agency on 30 April.

Mr. Key: The launch of the Highways Agency was marked by modest functions for about 2,560 staff in London and the regions at a total cost of approximately £7,000. The functions catered for staff who joined the agency on 1 April and those who transferred to the new Government regional offices.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 390, if he will supply similar information on prohibition notices for heavy goods vehicles in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: The table categorises prohibitions issued by defect.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 3, regarding the appointment of a temporary financial director in the Transport Research Laboratory, who took the decision to make the appointment.

Mr. Key: In line with the terms of the framework document for the Transport Research Laboratory the decision to appoint a temporary financial director was made by the principal establishment and finance officer of the Department, in consultation with the chief executive of the Transport Research Laboratory.

Spofforth Bypass

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was North Yorkshire county council's estimate for building the Spofforth bypass in 1988; and what has been their subsequent estimates for each of the last six years.

Mr. Key: North Yorkshire county council first submitted an estimate for Spofforth bypass to my Department in 1988 for the financial year 1989-90. This was for the sum of £1·199 million. Subsequent estimates are as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	1·920
1991-92	2·035
1992-93	1·976
1993-94	3·394
1994-95	3·220

Coach Safety

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 May, Official Report, column 596, if he will make it his policy to make an assessment of the safety benefits of anti-crush zones in place of rear seats of coaches.

Mr. Key: No.

Road Pricing Schemes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has sought evidence from Spain as to the effects of road pricing schemes.

Mr. Key: The Green Paper, "Paying for Better Motorways", Cm 2200, reviewed the experience of tolling in a number of countries, including Spain. We found no cases which would provide a reliable indication of the likely effects of tolling in this country. In Spain, tolled roads were planned and constructed as such, and average toll levels are around 10p per mile for cars, well in excess of the highest illustrative figure of 1·5p per mile quoted in the Green Paper for tolling the existing motorway network in Great Britain.

Marine Safety

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the results of the survey on port reception facilities by the Marine Safety Agency will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The survey on port reception facilities being undertaken by the Marine Safety Agency is in two parts; a survey questionnaire and an independent research project to assess the quality of the facilities provided. The results of the research project will be published when it is completed in September 1994.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what proportion of ships entering United Kingdom ports request the use of oily waste reception facilities and other reception facilities; and how many, and what proportion, actually use them.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency does not maintain statistics of the number of ships requesting and using oily waste and other reception facilities at United Kingdom ports and this information could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The research currently being undertaken to assess the quality of facilities provided in United Kingdom ports will, however, identify whether any specific restrictions are placed on the use of the facilities provided. Results of the research project will be published when it is completed in September 1994.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the charges imposed by each port for the use of oily waste reception facilities.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency is currently undertaking a comprehensive survey to assess the quality of reception facilities provided in United Kingdom ports. The survey will indicate the level of charges for the use of oily waste reception facilities and the extent to which they are integrated into harbour fees. Consideration will be given as to what useful information might be published when the results of the survey have been evaluated.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ports which require pre-sorting of waste before ships can use oily waste reception facilities.

Mr. Norris: The nature of oily waste reception facilities is such that pre-sorting is not necessary.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has done of the cost-effectiveness for potential users of port waste facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department commissioned research into the provision of reception facilities in United Kingdom ports in September 1991. This survey on oily waste and garbage reception facilities, undertaken by Liverpool university, concluded that at the ports visited facilities existed or could be made available to meet the requirements of MARPOL. There was no evidence of a policy of overcharging, but the arrangements for small amounts of garbage were not considered adequate. The research currently being undertaken by the Marine Safety Agency into port reception facilities will provide a comprehensive picture of the current situation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Scotch Whisky

3. Dr. Hampson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact the recent GATT agreement will have on the Scotch whisky industry.

Mr. Soames: I am delighted that exports of Scotch whisky are at record levels.

The tariff cuts we obtained in the GATT agreement will help the industry to build on this fine achievement.

Agricultural Tenancies

9. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions she has had with the National Farmers Union regarding changes in agricultural tenancies.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend has frequent contact with the National Farmers Union on various matters. I am pleased to say that we are in complete agreement on the need for reform of agricultural tenancy law.

Common Agricultural Policy

14. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the effect of enlargement of the European Community on the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jack: Accession by Austria, Sweden, Finland and Norway is unlikely to have major implications for the CAP.

But the further enlargement of the Union to include the countries of central and eastern Europe would, I believe, require fundamental changes to the present CAP.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has for further reform of the CAP.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am pressing for further reforms to the common agricultural policy, both in the beef sector and in those sectors not reformed in 1992, particularly sugar, wine, olive oil and fruit and vegetables.

Reform is necessary to reduce costs and to bring these sectors closer to the market.

In the longer term, I shall press for support prices to be further reduced so as to bring supply and demand into better balance and so make supply controls, such as quotas and set-aside, redundant.

Horticulture Industry

15. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps can be taken to strengthen the horticulture industry.

Mr. Jack: Our best growers set the example by responding to the needs of the market and focusing on quality, price, service and attention to detail.

Whales

16. Dr. Spink: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about the latest developments at the International Whaling Commission.

Mr. Jack: The satisfactory outcome of the latest IWC meeting in Mexico, including the establishment of the southern ocean whale sanctuary, is detailed in my reply of 15 June, c. 575-77.

19. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the conflicting evidence presented at the international whaling conference in Mexico of the number of blue whales (a) in the northern hemisphere and (b) in the southern hemisphere; and what action she is taking to urge the international community to protect the species.

Mr. Jack: I am not aware of any conflicting evidence on the current number of blue whales which was presented to this year's IWC. Abundance estimate of whales are primarily based on sighting surveys, and surveys are in hand to provide revised estimates of blue whale numbers throughout their range. Blue whales remain fully protected.

Animal Health

17. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the adequacy of animal health controls.

Mr. Soames: We take the threat of animal disease very seriously and constantly reassess the adequacy of our animal health controls.

We are not complacent and have taken those steps we consider necessary to safeguard our high animal health status.

Bacon

18. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives she has taken to promote British bacon.

Mr. Jack: The Meat and Livestock Commission has prime responsibility for promotion of British bacon, but the Ministry also plays a part through its pig assurance scheme which provides the farm assurance element of the British charter quality bacon scheme.

Food Production

20. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she last met the Food and Drink Federation to discuss the importance of food production to the United Kingdom economy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My ministerial colleagues and I have frequent discussions with the federation on topics of concern to an industry which makes such a valuable contribution to the United Kingdom economy.

Fisheries Council

21. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what matters were discussed at the last EC Fisheries Council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 441-43, on the outcome of the 10 June Council of Fisheries Ministers.

Milk Marque

22. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has had in the last month on the future of Milk Marque.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I and my Department have received various representations. I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales approved the milk marketing board's reorganisation scheme, and modifications on 16 June.

Animal Transportation

23. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she is taking to improve conditions for the transport of animals.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received to press for the limitation of journeys for live animals to eight hours; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones).

EC Agricultural Expenditure

24. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest estimate for EC spending on agriculture in 1995; and if she will express the total as a sum per day in pound sterling.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the 1995 EC preliminary draft budget, CAP expenditure has been set at the level of the agriculture guideline of 36,994 mecu, £28,477 million.

This equates to £78 million per day.

Agriculture Promotion

25. Mr. Richards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she is taking to ensure that British agriculture is widely promoted.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry devotes considerable effort to the support and promotion of the agricultural industry, as the departmental report, a copy of which is deposited in the Library, and our regular news releases, make clear. We support Food From Britain to the tune of £5 million per annum and provide the statutory framework for the Meat and Livestock Commission and other industry bodies which carry out promotional work. We have launched the continental challenge this year to help United Kingdom suppliers find markets with European retailers. MAFF Ministers are making promotional visits this year to Brazil, Colombia, the Czech Republic, India, Poland, the Slovak Republic and the USA. Our new marketing development scheme, launched on 15 June, could be used to help set up new promotional initiatives.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

26. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ADAS consultancy posts are to be cut during 1994-95.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This is a matter delegated to ADAS under its framework document.

I am informed by the chief executive of ADAS that in order to achieve 63 per cent. of cost recovery for chargeable advisory services in 1994-95, ADAS expects to need to shed some 325 posts, found in approximately equal numbers from among administrative and consultancy positions.

Of the 160 consultancy staff posts to be cut, ADAS expects 75 staff to be made compulsorily redundant at the end of June, following a voluntary early retirement and severance scheme.

Fishing Rights

27. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what she is doing to preserve British fishing rights.

Mr. Jack: The common fisheries policy, which was established in 1983, took good account of United Kingdom interests in all the major stocks around our shores. We also, at that time, reduced the access rights of other member states in our coastal waters by nearly three quarters. Since then, the Government have continued to protect British fishing interests. More recently, the United Kingdom has led the successful opposition to the European Commission's "blank cheque" proposals for future access by Spanish and Portuguese fishing vessels to the waters of other member states, and we ensured that detailed rules must be drawn up within a tight framework of safeguards which have been agreed by the Council. These rules protect our quota shares and require that there shall be no increase in fishing effort in areas subject to the Spanish and Portuguese accession treaty. For other areas, including the North sea, any proposals for access would have to be for non-quota species only and take account of track record. The outcome of the negotiations on Norwegian accession to the common fisheries policy also protects the interests of British fishermen, with relative stability assured and no reduction in United Kingdom fishing opportunities. Indeed, we have increased fishing possibilities for cod at North Norway.

Fisheries

28. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the effect of enlargement of the EU on the British fishing industry.

Mr. Jack: In my reply of 22 March to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris), Official Report, columns 120-22. I set out the fisheries implications for the United Kingdom and the other member states of the European Union, of Norwegian Accession. Swedish quotas in the North sea will be consolidated at the average for the period 1989 to 1993, while the arrangements for Swedish and Finnish market access will be the same as for Norway.

Protected Birds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, by estate, those occasions on which birds belonging to protected species have been found (a) shot, (b) poisoned or (c) otherwise illegally killed in each of the past five years; and how many (i) prosecutions and (ii) convictions have resulted.

Mr. Soames: Cases reported to this Ministry of protected birds killed by poisoning are given in the table on a county basis as details of the estates on which poisoned birds have been found are not readily available. The location where a poisoned bird is found is not necessarily the same place as where it consumed the poison. This Ministry does not collect information on protected bird species that have been illegally shot or otherwise illegally killed.

Information held centrally by the Home Office on prosecutions and convictions for illegal activities cannot separately identify the killing of protected birds from other illegal activities against them because the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 does not separately identify an offence of killing wild birds from the offence of injuring or taking them.

Details of illegal poisoning incidents reported to MAFF involving protected bird species from 1989-93

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the representations she has received over the last 18 months on the subject of the proposed reform in agricultural tenancy law were in favour of a statutory minimum period; how many were in favour of complete contractual freedom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Since 1 January 1993, my right hon. Friend has received 187 representations via hon. Members and 26 addressed to her direct. Of these the vast majority were broadly supportive of the Government's proposals, with only 23 favouring a statutory minimum term. We are keen to introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time is available.

Horses (Exports)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to change the minimum values for horses being exported abroad.

Mr. Soames: The Animal Health Act 1981, and orders made under the Act, require a minimum valuation to be provided for certain categories of equines before a welfare export licence is issued. There are exemptions for thoroughbred horses certified by the Jockey Club and other horses intended for breeding, riding, exhibition, jumping and polo are also exempted. I have no plans to change these arrangements.

Rabies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions for breaches of the Rabies Order 1974, as amended, there were in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The number of prosecutions in Great Britain for breaches of the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974, as amended, in the last three years is as follows:

	Number
1991	64
1992	45
1993	24

These figures are compiled from the returns given to the Department by local authorities, which are responsible for enforcing the order.

EMPLOYMENT

Acquired Rights Directive

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the legal and consequential costs involved in the various proceedings initiated against the United Kingdom by the EC Commission in relation to the application of the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The disbursements incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom in connection with the proceedings in the European Court of Justice concerning the acquired rights directive—case C-382/92—and the collective redundancies directive—case C-383-92—were about £9,200. This consists of counsel's fees, VAT, travelling and hotel accommodation. This figure does not include the costs of staff in the Treasury Solicitor's Department or the Employment Department's legal advisers who provided legal services and advised within the normal course of their duties. No assessment has been made of any wider legal or consequential costs.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) men and (b) women aged between 55 and 65 years are currently in paid full-time employment.

Miss Widdecombe: Latest estimates from the winter 1993-94 labour force survey for Great Britain show that 50 per cent. of males and 15 per cent. of females aged 55 to 64 worked full-time as employees or self-employed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest information he has on levels of economic inactivity in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas; and what were the comparable figures (a) 12 months and (b) 24 months ago.

Miss Widdecombe: The available estimates from the labour force survey of economic inactivity levels refer to the Doncaster local authority district area, and are given in the following table. No information from the LFS for local authority districts available prior to spring 1992.

Number of Economically Inactive Persons in Doncaster:

Quarter	Economically Inactive Persons
Spring 1992	97,000
Winter 1992-93	97,000
Winter 1993-94	97,000

[1] Persons not employed or unemployed according to the International Labour Organisation definitions.
Source: Labour Force Survey (not seasonally adjusted).

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for the Doncaster and Mexborough area the current number of (a) males and (b) females who are in receipt of unemployment benefit, and who have been unemployed for (i) longer than six months, (ii) longer than 12 months, (iii) longer than two years and (iv) three years and over.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table:

Unadjusted claimant unemployment by duration (April 1994)

Doncaster and Mexborough[1]	Male	Female
Over 6 months	14,642	3,015
Over 12 months	10,007	1,660
Over 2 years	5,977	927
Over 3 years	3,738	577

[1] Figures are totals for the Doncaster and the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work areas combined.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been created by the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in (a) manufacturing and (b) services industries since its inception.

Miss Widdecombe: Jobs are created by employers, and it is not possible to give a precise total for the numbers of cases where a training and enterprise council has assisted job creation in some way. The mission statement of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC is: "To work for local prosperity by creating through partnerships, a climate in our community were greater value is given to education, training and enterprise".

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to redraw the boundaries of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I have no plans to redraw the boundaries of the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list those organisations which had contracts with the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in 1993-94, but will not have a contract with the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in 1994-95; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: There is only one organisation which had a contract with Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council 1993-94 which does not have a contract with the TEC in 1994-95. This organisation is Barony college in Scotland. The reason for not contracting this year is because the trainee has now completed his training.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what regulations, codes of practice, and/or guidelines govern the party political activity of senior paid employees including chief executives and directors of the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC; how these differ from those which govern principal and chief officers of the local authorities: and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The training and enterprise council operating agreement precludes TECs from using any of their funds for party political purposes. TECs are private companies and it is for each TEC to decide what, if any, regulations should govern party political activity by senior paid employees. In addition, civil service staff who are seconded to TECs are subject to the same regulations as all other civil servants.

Fit-for-work Awards

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list each employer who has received a fit-for-work award in each of the past five years and the percentage of their work forces who were registered as disabled people at the time of the award.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The last fit-for-work awards were made in 1990. I have arranged for a list of the award winners in 1989 and 1990 to be placed in the Library.

Following consultation on the 1990 Document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", and advice from the National Advisory Council on Employment of people with disabilities, the then Secretary of State for Employment announced his decision to end the award scheme in 1991.

The percentage of registered disabled people employed by winners was not verified as part of the award process. These awards were intended to help promote positive policies in all aspects of the employment of disabled people, whether registered or not.

Health and Safety

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that following the market testing of the distribution of Health and Safety Executive publications the Government have been successful in achieving their objectives of value for money.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following the change in the arrangements for the distribution of their publication in October 1993, the Health and Safety Executive is monitoring closely the performance of both contractors to ensure an effective and efficient service which provides value for money.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has now taken to evaluate the market testing of the distribution of Health and Safety Executive publications.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is too early to evaluate fully the market test of the distibution of Health and Safety Executive publications. The new arrangements became effective on 4 October 1993 for a three-year period. The HSE is monitoring closely the performance of both contractors. An interim evaluation will take place after the first full year of the new operation and a full evaluation will take place at the end of the second year.

Disabled People (Employment)

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what level of financial support is currently given by his Department to Remploy; and what the figure was in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Sir Harold Walker, dated 21 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding the level of financial support which is currently given to Remploy by the Employment Service and the figures for the past 15 years.

In the current financial year Remploy will be receiving a total of £92,082,000.

The figures for the past 15 years are as follows:

1979-80	31,008
1980-81	42,123
1981-82	45,684
1982-83	49,100
1983-84	51,903
1984-85	56,570
1985-86	59,290
1986-87	57,144
1987-88	57,996
1988-89	62,714
1989-90	67,013
1990-91	72,167
1991-92	75,346
1992-93	83,995
1993-94	89,199

I hope this is helpful.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Audiovisual Eureka

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans his Department has for the United Kingdom's forthcoming presidency of Audiovisual Eureka.

Mr. Brooke: The United Kingdom presidency of Audiovisual Eureka will run from 1 July 1994 to 30 June 1995.

Our objectives for the presidency will be to enhance and give priority to those aspects of Audiovisual Eureka which complement other European initiatives aimed at strengthening the European audiovisual industry. We shall place particular emphasis on those which foster practical co-operation between western European countries and the countries of central and eastern Europe. We shall also aim to promote the use of new technologies for the production of films and programmes; and we shall seek to promote audiovisual technology transfer between east and west.

A central part of the United Kingdom presidency work programme will be to oversee an independent evaluation of Audiovisual Eureka as part of a thorough review of its effectiveness, and to ensure that any recommendations arising from the review are implemented.

I shall be inviting Ministers of the 32 participating countries, as well as the European Commission and Council of Europe, to attend a meeting in London on 16 June 1995 to mark the culmination of our presidency.

Football Stadiums

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he has reached his final decision on applications received from Premier League and first division football clubs for an extension to the Government's 1 August all-seater deadline.

Mr. Brooke: I have. On 26 May, in answer to a written parliamentary question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs), columns 227-29, I announced that I had considered applications made by 11 clubs, and having taken into account the recommendations made by the Football Licensing Authority, formed a preliminary view. I also set out the criteria against which each application had been assessed.

"Clubs seeking an extension in order to relocate to a new ground are expected to produce clear evidence that such an extension would be for a strictly limited period and that the club could realistically complete its relocation within a reasonable and definite time scale.

Clubs applying for an extension in order to redevelop their existing grounds are expected to show why their circumstances are wholly exceptional, why the reasons for the delay could not reasonably have been foreseen and why they could not be attributed to the actions or inaction of the club."

Clubs were given until 16 June to make further representations to me in support of their case, before I announced my final decision.

On the basis of the information then before me, I indicated that I was minded to agree that the following clubs, all of which are actively engaged in relocation to new stadia, have a valid case for an extension of the 1 August deadline:

Derby County
Grimsby Town
Middlesbrough
Portsmouth
Sunderland

I have today written to the chairmen of each of these clubs to confirm that my final decision is to grant limited extensions in each case.

I have warned, however, that although I have granted an extension, my general policy remains, and I have in mind that the extensions will be for one year only. I have also explained that any decision to allow the retention of standing accommodation for a limited period will not affect safety requirements at the ground. Clubs will still be required to observe the terms and conditions of the local authority safety certificate issued under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975, and any requirement placed on the club as a result of the FLA exercising its powers under section 13 of the Football Spectators Act 1989. The responsibility of each club to ensure that the ground meets the necessary safety requirements remains unchanged, irrespective of whether or not an extension is granted.

On 26 May, I also wrote to the chairmen of the following clubs indicating that, although I appreciated the very real difficulties they faced, I did not consider that the case they had presented was sufficiently strong to warrant an extension of the deadline beyond 1 August 1994:

Barnsley
Chelsea
Manchester City
Newcastle United Oldham Athletic Swindon Town

I said that in reaching my final decision I would consider each case on its individual merits in the light of the above criteria, having regard to all material facts and to the need to be consistent where circumstances are similar and fair to all clubs in the Premier League and Football League first division. I said that I would also take into account any other relevant points which the clubs wish to make in response to my letters.

Representations were received from five of these clubs before the 16 June deadline. I have given careful consideration to the points raised, and have also reviewed the original applications which each club made to the Football Licensing Authority.

I have decided that only one of these clubs, Newcastle United, has presented a sufficiently exceptional case to warrant an extension to the deadline, and that I would not be justified in granting extensions to Barnsley, Chelsea, Manchester City, Oldham Athletic or Swindon Town. I have therefore written to the chairmen of each of these clubs to inform them of my final decision.

I have today laid an Order under section 11 of the Football Spectators Act 1989 directing the Football Licensing Authority to include in its licences the following conditions:

Only seated accommodation shall be provided for spectators at a designated football match; and Spectators shall only be admitted to watch a designated football match from seated accommodation.

The order will come into force on 15 July, and will apply to all clubs in the Premier League and first division of the Football League, save those which have been granted extensions to the 1 August deadline. The following clubs promoted into the—now—first division since 1991 will also be omitted from the order:

Bolton Wanderers—promoted in 1993
Burnley—promoted in 1994
Port Vale—promoted in 1994
Reading—promoted in 1994
Stoke City—promoted in 1993
West Bromwich Albion—promoted in 1993

These clubs will have three years from the date of their promotion to ensure that their grounds are all-seated.

I am pleased to report that the majority of clubs in the top two divisions will meet or are planning to meet the Government's deadline. I congratulate those clubs on the great strides they have made in improving the safety and comfort of spectators at their grounds. I will follow closely the progress made by clubs to which I have granted an extension, and I look forward to being able to report that these clubs also have successfully achieved all-seater stadiums.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Romanian Children

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects to improve the care and education of Romania's children are being supported through the Poland and Hungary assistance for economic restructuring—PHARE—programme of the European Union; and how British organisations are contributing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A wide range of projects to improve the care and education of children in Romania are being supported under the PHARE programme. They include: in health care, particularly maternal and infant health services; the rehabilitation of orphanages and the training of personnel; the establishment—in concert with the Romanian Government—of a national policy for the protection of children; and the development of strategies to prevent the institutionalisation of vulnerable groups of children.

European Commission data on contracts awarded under PHARE are not broken down by recipient country. Between 1990 and 1993, 125 contracts were awarded to British organisations working in the areas of non governmental organisations, social adjustment, humanitarian aid, science and techonology, health and public administration.

Ethiopia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about deaths occurring in Omo valley district in southern Ethiopia because of transport difficulties in reaching famine victims; and what the Government and the European Union are doing to overcome these difficulties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in touch with the Ethiopian Relief and Rehabilitation Commission—RRC—about the situation. There are no official figures for deaths from drought and famine. The terrain in much of the region is mountainous with poor or non-existent roads. Road and air access is difficult; ox carts are often the only means of transporting supplies.

The RRC is planning to carry out a helicopter survey of the remoter areas of the region to assess accurately needs and access routes. We are prepared to help with the survey and with implementing its recommendations.

Since January, we have committed 45,000 tonnes of bilateral food aid to Ethiopia. The EU has committed 264,000 tonnes. We have also provided about £191,000 for seeds and tools and therapeutic feeding centres throughout the Omo region.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what overseas aid Her Majesty's Government are currently providing to Pakistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 23 June 1994]: Gross British bilateral aid to Pakistan for 1992-93—the latest year for which figures are available—was £34·483 million. This consisted of £18·619 million under the ODA's bilateral country programme, £12·676 million in Commonwealth Development Corporation investments and £3·188 million in other aid, including debt relief and drug related assistance.

Recent initiatives include projects in primary education and health, family planning and participatory urban and rural development. Other main sectors covered are land development and irrigation, energy and water and sanitation.

Brazil (Mahogany)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he makes of the percentage of mahogany exported from Brazil to the United Kingdom which has been obtained illegally in Brazil.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no reliable means of assessing whether or not timber entering the United Kingdom has come from an illegal source in its country of origin. The legality of timber extraction is a matter for the authorities in the country in which it takes place.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Debts (Non-payment)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 20 Prison Service establishments to which the largest number of those found guilty of offences in respect of non-payment of debt were committed in the latest period of 12 months for which there is information, specifying in addition how many of these offenders were sentenced for non-payment of (a) television licences and (b) community charge.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the tables separately for the non-criminal offences of non-payment of debt and also for non-payment of fine for using a television without a licence.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals his Department has to make it an offence to employ an illegal immigrant.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At present, although it is an offence knowingly to harbour an illegal entrant or an overstayer, there is no general requirement on employers to satisfy themselves as to the immigration status of their employees. The immigration service already gives priority to detecting those working here illegally and taking subsequent action to curtail their stay or remove them from the United Kingdom. The Government keep the law in this area under review and expect employers to behave responsibly.

Racial Incidents

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial incidents were recorded by each police force in England and Wales in 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is now collected on a financial year basis. The figures for 1993-94 are given: these have been collected by the same means as figures published for earlier periods, and they are comparable. I will be considering further the arrangements which are in place for collecting and publishing such figures in future in the light of the recent report by the Home Affairs Select Committee on racial attacks and harassment—HC 71-1.

Channel Islands

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the circumstances of the departure from office of the Deputy Bailiff and Lieutenant Bailiff of the island of Jersey.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Appointment as Deputy Bailiff of Jersey is by the Crown, on advice from the Home Secretary in his capacity as the Privy Councillor with special responsibility for Jersey. A Deputy Bailiff may depart from office on the expiry of the period of appointment, or on appointment to other office, or by resignation, or by removal by the Crown acting on advice.

The Bailiff of Jersey of the day may appoint for a purpose ad hoc, or permanently, one or more lieutenant bailiffs. Permanent appointees may resign from office, or be removed from it by the bailiff; otherwise, their appointments end with the departure from office of the Bailiff who appointed them.

Prison Visits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were allowed to take part in an assisted prison visits scheme during 1993; and what was the total amount of funding paid under this scheme for such visits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 24 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of people taking part in the assisted prison visit scheme during 1993 and the total amount of funding paid out under it.

The information you request is not available for the calendar year or in the form requested. For the financial year 1993-94 the number of successful applications was 74,280 and the total funds disbursed were £2,236,816.

Firearms

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) killed and (b) injured in incidents involving firearms in each year since 1983.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which can be found in the Library—latest edition, 1992, Cm 2410, table 3.8. Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Mrs. Karamat Bi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when arrangements are to be made to issue Mrs. Karamat Bi—Ref.: TH/2964/93—through the British high commission in Islamabad with a visa to visit the United Kingdom following her appeal against refusal to grant being upheld in Leeds on 15 December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A copy of the adjudicator's determination was sent to the entry clearance officer in Islamabad on 6 January. Inquiries are being made into the present position, and the hon. Member will be informed as soon as possible.

Remand

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many males remanded in custody in 1993 spent (a) up to one week, (b) one to two weeks, (c) two to four weeks, (d) four to eight weeks, (e) eight weeks to three months, (f) three to six months, (g) six months to 12 months and (h) over 12 months in prison before their court case was concluded;

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions asking how many males and females remanded in custody in 1993 spent (a) up to one week, (b) one to two weeks, (c) two to four weeks, (d) four to eight weeks, (e) eight weeks to three months, (f) three to six months, (g) six months to 12 months and (h) over 12 months in prison before their court case was concluded.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Assistance

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the regions of the United Kingdom that have received European regional development funding in each of the last three years; and what was the amount of the funding to each region.

Mr. Sainsbury: The last programme period for the European regional development fund ran for five years, from 1989 to 1993. The table gives a breakdown of the ERDF funding provided by objective and by region during that time.

Objective 1 is for development and structural adjustment of the regions whose development is lagging behind. Objective 2 is for converting regions or parts of regions seriously affected by industrial decline. Objective 5(b) is for development of rural areas. These objectives are specifically regional in nature; they involve measures restricted to certain eligible regions or parts of regions.

Smaller sums shown in the table as "miscellaneous", were made available outside the objective 1, 2 and 5(b) areas.

Mahogany

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what are the sources of his Department's data on the importation of Brazilian mahogany into the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the Brazilian companies from which mahogany was imported into the United Kingdom during 1993;

(3) which United Kingdom companies imported mahogany during 1993 from the (a) Bannach, (b) Perachi, (c) Maginco and (d) Impar companies of Brazil;

(4) how much mahogany from Brazil by volume and value was imported into the United Kingdom in 1993.

Mr. Needham: There are no official sources for information on the importation of Brazilian mahogany into the United Kingdom. The information has not been available since 1992 because the United Kingdom trade classification no longer separately identifies mahogany from several other non-coniferous woods.

Information on United Kingdom importing companies and Brazilian exporting companies is not available.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he intends to take in order to ensure that illegally felled mahogany from Brazil does not enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The Government have no reliable or practical way of identifying Brazilian mahogany which has come from an illegal source. Nor is there any legitimate way in which the United Kingdom could adopt a national ban on the import of such products. Primary responsibility for ensuring that harvesting and export is carried out lawfully must rest with the Brazilian Government.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Correspondence

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the latest figures showing the volume of correspondence from hon. Members to Ministers and agency chief executives, the targets set for reply and the percentage of replies sent within target.

Mr. David Davis: The 1993 figures are set out in the table. The table also sets out figures showing ministerial correspondence in 1992 first published on 23 March 1993, Official Report, columns 550-54.

Notes on 1993 figures[16]

[1] Represents target set for Central Statistical Office (CSO) to submit replies to HM Treasury. In addition, the chief executive received three letters directly from Members of Parliament, all of which were answered within the 10-working day target.
[2] Figures cover November and December 1992 only.
[3] Includes all ministerial replies, not only letters from Members of Parliament.
[4] Figures cover 1 January to 31 August 1992. On 1 September new 15 working day target was set. From 1 September to 31 December 1992, 91 per cent. of 2,205 letters received were replied to within target.
[5] Figure includes 29 cases relating to Wales—with effect from 1 April 1993.
[6] Targets within the Home Office are actually expressed in calendar days, because of bank holidays therefore, performance will occasionally be measured against fewer than the 15—or 25—working day target. 25 working day target is for replies to Immigration and nationality department, Prison Service and United Kingdom Passport Agency subjects, 15 working day target is for all other subjects. Members of Parliament are encouraged to write direct to the immigration and nationality department board. These letters are included in the totals shown. New Home Office targets were adopted on 1 October 1992 and some 20,000 cases in 1992-93 were not included in the main chart.
[7] HM Prison Service established as an agency on 1 April 1993. Targets within the Prison Service are actually expressed in calendar days, because of bank holidays therefore, performance will occasionally be measured against fewer than the 25 working day target.
[8] Head office figures.
[9] Local office figures.
[10] Figure excludes letters received by the legal secretariat to the Law Officers which were subsequently replied to by either the Director of Public Prosecutions or the Director of the Serious Fraud Office.
[11] Represents correspondence received since 1 April 1993 when new computer recording system was introduced.
[12] Replies signed by Minister.
[13] Replies signed by Private Secretary to Minister.
[15] Child Support Agency was launched on 5 April 1993.
[16] The 1992 figures were taken from the Official Report, 23 March 1993, columns 550-54. Please also refer to notes given with that reply.

Higher Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice he has given to the Higher Education Funding Council for England regarding efficiency gains from (a) teaching and (b) research funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The spending plans announced in last year's Budget imply annual efficiency gains in the HEFCE sector of 4 per cent. in 1994-95 and 1995-96 and 3 per cent. in 1996-97. Separately, we have asked the HEFCE to maintain broadly the current proportional split between funds for teaching and research, and it will monitor the impact of these arrangements.

TREASURY

Life Insurance Directives

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the consequences for the taxation of insurance activities of the coming into force of the European Community's third life insurance directive —92/96/EEC—and third non-life insurance directive— 92/49/EEC.

Mr. Dorrell: The third life and non-life insurance directives come into force on 1 July 1994. They are an important part of measures being taken to create a single market in financial services throughout the European Union. One effect of the directives is that insurance companies whose head office is in another member state of the European Union will not be subject to regulation and supervision by the Department of Trade and Industry under the Insurance Companies Act 1982. This will have the effect of taking these companies outside the tax rules which apply to insurance companies because those tax rules are based on provisions of the Insurance Companies Act which will no longer apply to them.

As a result, we shall be introducing legislation in the next Finance Bill to change the definition of insurance company to ensure that all companies operating in the United Kingdom remain within the special tax rules for insurance companies. We shall also be amending provisions which give relief from tax where there is a transfer of insurance business sanctioned by a court in the United Kingdom so that they also apply where there is a transfer of United Kingdom insurance business sanctioned by the regulatory authorities in another member state.

We will also introduce measures to prevent a loss of tax where there is a transfer of insurance business to a transferee who does not carry on that business in the United Kingdom so as to be within the charge to tax.

Subject to their approval by Parliament, these measures will take effect from 1 July 1994, the date on which the third insurance directives come into force.

I also wish to make it clear that, contrary to some reports, the coming into force of the third life assurance directive will of itself have no effect on the taxation of gains from life assurance policies. At my request, the Inland Revenue is currently conducting a review of life assurance taxation in the light of single market developments and this includes the taxation of policy holders. The Government will decide in due course in the light of that review whether changes to the taxation of gains from life assurance policies are necessary. Meanwhile, the existing rules on policyholder taxation remain in force, and the Inland Revenue will continue to certify policies as "qualifying policies" where they meet the conditions laid down in the legislation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conditions are being sought by the Greek Government for the lifting of its embargo on the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia; and what his response is to these proposed conditions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Greek Government's decision to close Salonika to Macedonian trade was in reaction to a long-running dispute about the flag, name, symbols and constitution of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. We consider the Greek action to be unjustified and support the decision of the European Commission to refer the case to the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in lifting Greece's unilateral sanctions on the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Greece still refuses to reopen Salonika to Macedonian trade. On 14 June, the European Court of Justice heard the Commission's request for interim measures, pending the hearing of the substantive case against Greece. The court's decision is expected shortly. We continue to make clear to the Greek Government that their action is unjustified, and that it should be reversed without precondition.

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what armed activity is taking place in Burundi; and what action is being taken by the United Nations to prevent the Rwandan war from spreading to Burundi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have had no reports of armed activity in Burundi. The special representative of the Secretary-General, Mr. Ould Abdullah, heads a small good offices mission in Bujumbura which has been successful in promoting stability in the country.

There are also 47 Organisation of African Unity observers stationed in Burundi in a confidence-building capacity. This mission has the full support of the UN.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many member states of the European Union have totally independent military nuclear weapons.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Two—the United Kingdom and France. The United Kingdom's nuclear forces are assigned to NATO but remain at all times under the control of the British Government.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Nations Security Council last considered Liberia; and what are the latest reports to the United Nations on the progress of its mission there.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council met in late May 1994 to discuss the Secretary-General's report on Liberia of 18 May 1994. The Council President issued a statement on Liberia on behalf of the Security Council on 23 May 1994. Copies of both the statement and the report have been placed in the House Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what problems exist with the financing of the United Nations supported peace initiative in Liberia; and which countries have proposed to withdraw.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations status of contributions reports shows that at 30 April 1994, of the $39·8 million assessed on member states for the United Nations observer mission in Liberia—UNOMIL—for the period 22 September 1993 to 21 March 1994, unpaid assessments amounted to $24·6 million.

The United Nations Secretary-General reported on 18 April that as of 31 March, voluntary contributions to the trust fund for the implementation of the Contonou accord amounted to $15·16 million, from the Governments of Denmark, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. At the time of the Secretary-General's report, expenditure authorised from the trust fund totalled $11·7 million.

The Secretary-General also reported that, on the basis of a draft budget prepared by a joint mission of the United Nations and the International Foundation for Electoral Systems in September 1993, the Elections Commission has estimated that an overall amount of $13·7 million will be required to carry out the electoral process. The report stated that the transitional Government will endeavour to provide some $8·5 million of this amount and will seek international support for the remaining $5·2 million.

Of the United Nations troop contributors, only Tanzania has announced a decision to withdraw.

European Union

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he has sought to bring to the attention of the Greek Government for discussion during their period as holders of the presidency of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have had discussions on a full range of European and international issues with the Greek Government during their presidency of the Council of the European Union.

Brazil

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will instruct appropriate United Kingdom diplomatic staff in Brazil to discuss with representatives of the Nucleus for Indigenous Rights the issue of the mahogany trade between Brazil and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Our embassy in Brasilia is instructed to continue its close contacts with the Nucleus for Indigenous Rights on various issues, including mahogany.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security during the first year of the child support scheme how many parents with care previously in receipt of income support ceased to be eligible as a result of receipt of child maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in respect of those parents who have ceased to receive income support as a result of receiving child support during the first year of the scheme, in how many cases their resulting income has been (a) up to £5, (b) up to £10, (c) up to £15 and (d) up to £20 per week above income support level.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracts, and for what total sum were let out by his Department or agencies for which

Family Credit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support applicants were refused benefit on grounds of (a) partners' earnings and (b) partners in receipt of family credit in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the research by the social policy research unit on the assessment of self-employed earnings in family credit to be published.

Mr. Burt: The report "Measuring Low Incomes: Self-Employment and Family Credit" by the social policy research unit at the university of York was published on 3 February and copies were placed in the Library.

In addition, I have today placed in the Library copies of the consultation document on the report. We have circulated it to a wide range of interested bodies and have asked for comments by 31 August.

Job Seekers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether (a) the Benefits Agency or (b) the Employment Service will implement the new job seeker's allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply of Tuesday 21 June at column 87.

Habitual Residency Test

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what action he intends to take in relation to the habitual residency test; and if he will make a statement:

(2) when the Social Security Advisory Committee reported to him in relation to the proposed habitual residency test; what was the committee's conclusion or main recommendation in this matter; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library;

(3) what parliamentary action is required to implement the habitual residency test in relation to social security payments.

Mr. Burt: We are still considering the introduction of a habitual residence test in the income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit schemes. The report from the Social Security Advisory Committee and the Government's response will be published at the same time.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received to date concerning the habitual residency test; how many have been (a) broadly favourable and (b) broadly unfavourable.

Mr. Burt: No separate count has been kept of representations received on this matter.

Benefits Agency

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the new Benefits Agency premises in Johnstone town centre are scheduled to open; where these will be located; how many staff will be transferred to this location; from where they will be transferred; how many additional jobs will be created at what grade; what new or enhanced services will be available to clients from these new premises; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the total contract value of the new Benefits Agency office in Paisley; when he expects the office to be operational; when he expects the office to be officially opened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The opening of new Benefits Agency offices in Johnstone and Paisley is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 23 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the new Benefits Agency offices in Johnstone and Paisley.

Benefits Agency Estates, in liaison with Property Holdings, are negotiating the acquisition of a lease for Unit 5, William Street, Johnstone which on present plans is scheduled to open as a caller service point by the beginning of 1995.

The six staff currently employed in Johnstone will transfer from Floors Street to the new premises. No additional jobs will be created nor will any be lost.

The move to the main shopping area will mean the new office is more accessible to our customers and will provide an improved service for all members of the public in and around Johnstone.

The total contract value of the new Benefits Agency premises in Paisley is approximately £5·2 million.

It is expected that the new office will be operational in June 1995 with the official opening within 2 months thereafter. Plans for the official opening have yet to be finalised.

The Renfrew District Manager, Colin Wright, will be happy to provide you with any further details should you require them.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Benefits, Doncaster and Mexborough

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current number of recipients of (a) income support, (b) invalidity benefit and (c) retirement pension in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas; and what were the figures (i) 12 months and (ii) 24 months ago.

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 23 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about benefit recipients in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because Benefit Agency (BA) District boundaries do not correspond with county or borough boundaries.

Income Support (IS) recipients in the Doncaster area are dealt with by the Doncaster District of BA. This District comprises Doncaster West District Office (DO) and Doncaster East Branch Office (BO). IS recipients in the Mexborough area are dealt with by the Wath-on-Dearne Branch Office (BO) of the Rother and Dearne District. This office, however, also deals with areas other than Mexborough. Identifying the number of IS recipients resident in the Mexborough area and dealt with by Wath-on-Dearne BO would incur disproportionate cost.

In Appendix 1, I have provided information relating to numbers of IS recipients in the area dealt with by the Doncaster District, and by Wath-on-Dearne BO.

Although the Doncaster District of BA deals with Invalidity Benefit (IVB) and Retirement Pension (RP) for most of the Doncaster area, a small part is dealt with by the Mexborough BO of the BA Rother and Dearne District. Mexborough BO also covers IVB and RP for the Mexborough area, but from May 1994 also assumed responsibility for the Swinton and Wath-on-Dearne areas. Identifying the number of IVB or RP recipients resident in either the Mexborough or Doncaster areas and dealt with by Mexborough BO would also incur disproportionate cost.

However, in Appendices 2 and 3, I have provided information relating to IVB and RP recipients in the areas dealt with by the Doncaster District, and by Mexborough BO.

The figures provided for RP recipients include a small number of Widows Benefit recipients and an estimated number of RP recipients paid by direct credit transfer. The latest information available does not fully reflect the additional numbers appropriate to Mexborough BO following that office assuming responsibility for additional geographical areas in May 1994.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

TRANSPORT

Highways Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often the chief executive of the Highways Agency has met representatives from the private sector to discuss the possibility of market testing, contracting out or privatising work currently undertaken by the agency; and what were the names of the companies involved and the dates of the meetings.

Mr. Key: These questions relate to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 23 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about market testing.

I have not met any representatives from the private sector to discuss the possibility of market testing, contracting out or privatising work currently carried out by the Agency.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date of the employment of the Bray's detective agency to gather information on Twyford Down protesters; and from which subheads of which votes these funds were taken.

Mr. Key: This question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 23 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost of employing Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) to gather evidence of trespass on the M3 construction site near Winchester.

To date, Bray's have been paid £251,656·37. These costs have been met from the Highways Agency Vote 1 (National Road System: Capital Section A1 (New Construction and Renewal) of the Roads Vote.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations his Department has had with environmental groups about individual road schemes.

Mr. Key: This question relates to the operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 23 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about what consultations there have been with environmental groups with regard to individual road schemes.

Consultations with statutory bodies such as English Nature, English Heritage, the Countryside Commission and the National Rivers Authority take place from an early stage of route development.

Other environmental groups are given the opportunity to comment on a proposed scheme at public consultation and when the draft orders for the preferred route are published.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to request MARPOL—the marine pollution convention—to give special area status against oil pollution for the North sea.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Mr. Walley) on 10 February 1994, Official Report, column 471.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the last financial year the total salary costs plus bonuses for each of his agency chief executives and his Permanent Secretary.

Mr. Norris: Information on agency chief executives' salaries was set out in the answer I gave the hon. Lady on 21 March, Official Report, column 103. Details of chief executives' total remuneration including bonuses in 1993-94 will be published in the annual report for each agency. The salary of the Permanent Secretary was £90,148 per annum with effect from 1 April 1993.

Road Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of changes in the severity of road accident injuries resulting from the use of bull bars on road vehicles.

Mr. Key: We have no direct evidence. Impact tests using an instrumented child-size headform on a bull bar have shown that the severity of an impact on a bull bar appears significantly more than on a flexible bonnet. We have, therefore, taken steps to identify accidents where a pedestrian has been struck by a vehicle fitted with a bull bar with a view to determining whether bull bars are, in fact, causing increased injuries.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the numbers of road traffic accidents in each year since 1983 involving at least one motor vehicle driver who had been previously advised by a medical practitioner that they were not medically fit to drive; and how many involved (a) serious injuries and (b) fatalities.

Mr. Key: This information is not available.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he intends to issue the safeguarding direction for the route of the new channel tunnel rail link at Pepper Hill in the borough of Gravesham;

(2) when he intends to issue the safeguarding directions for the route of the new channel tunnel rail link at Ashford in Kent.

Mr. Freeman: Safeguarding directions for the route of the new channel tunnel rail link at both Pepper Hill and Ashford were issued yesterday and will come into force today. Copies are being placed in the Library.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ports which have facilities to accept chemical contaminated waste.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 23 June 1994]: The Marine Safety Agency is currently undertaking a comprehensive survey of the provision of reception facilities in United Kingdom ports. The results of the survey will be published when they have been evaluated.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to improve the monitoring of non-accidental discharges in United Kingdom territorial waters.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 23 June 1994]: All United Kingdom registered ships, aircraft and offshore installations are asked to report any incidents or sightings of oil to the United Kingdom Coastguard who passes the information to the marine pollution control unit. The MPCU carries out 500 hours of aerial surveillance per annum, using aircraft fitted with specialised electronic equipment for detecting oil slicks on the surface of the sea. This is targeted on the main shipping lanes where non-accidental discharges are known to occur most often.

These measures are considered adequate for the purposes of monitoring non-accidental discharges, and there are no plans to change or increase them.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ratify annex IV of the marine pollution convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 23 June 1994]: The Government will consider ratification of annex IV of MARPOL when the findings of a comprehensive survey of United Kingdom reception facilities, including those for sewage, are available later in the year.

ENVIRONMENT

Brixton City Challenge

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what indication he has given to Brixton city challenge that its grant is to be curtailed.

Mr. Baldry: Following a ministerial annual review of Brixton challenge, officials wrote to the chairman of the company on 10 March, indicating that it was not possible to approve the 1994-95 action plan at that time. Since then, the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction has met representatives of the three parties on Lambeth council, and the chairman of Brixton challenge. Satisfactory assurances have been given with regard to the implementation of the Brixton challenge 1994-95 action plan, and the Minister therefore wrote to the party leaders and chairman on 22 June confirming the continuation of funding.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Brixton city challenge.

Mr. Baldry: It was not possible to approve a second year of operation for Brixton challenge before the start of the current financial year because of their poor performance in 1993-94. However, assurances have now been given by the three party leaders at Lambeth that they will fully support Brixton challenge in the future, and the 1994-95 action plan has been revised by the company to make up for outputs lost last year. In these circumstances, the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction wrote to the Brixton challenge chairman and the Lambeth party leaders on 22 June informing them that he is now willing to approve a continuation of funding.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning Brixton city challenge.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has recently received three representations concerning Brixton city challenge.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of England's housing stock is constructed or adapted to meet the needs of physically disabled people at the latest date for which information is available; if he will break this information down into categories of housing tenure; what plans he has to enhance the availability of such housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Department collects information for England on building starts and completions of specialised housing for the chronically sick and disabled, and on conversions or improvements for disabled persons, but not on the stock of such dwellings for physically disabled people.

The available figures of housebuilding starts and completions by housing associations and local authorities for the chronically sick and disabled are shown in "Housing and Construction Statistics". Provisional data for 1993-94 in England are to be published shortly in the March quarter 1993 issue, part 1, and these are given in the table.

New housebuilding completions for the chronically sick and disabled England: 1993-94

	Housing associations	Local authorities	Totals
Wheelchair	136	7	143
Mobility	810	59	869
All	946	66	1,012

The numbers of dwellings converted or improved for disabled persons are published in "Housing and Construction Statistics". The latest available financial year figures are for 1992-93 and are on tables 2.19 and 2.20 of the December quarter 1993 issue, part 2.

All new housing association dwellings are required to be built to mobility standards. Allocations and priorities for local authority dwellings are determined by the individual authorities. The Department is considering whether to extend part M of the Building Regulations to cover all new buildings.

Housebuilding

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the last 15 years, in respect of the number of permanent dwellings (a) started, (b) under construction and (c) completed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Estimates of housebuilding starts and completions, and dwellings under construction in England are shown in the quarterly and annual publication "Housing and Construction Statistics".

Figures for 1991 and 1992, with provisional figures for 1993, are in the December quarter 1993 edition, part 1, table 1·2*(a)*; and those for each year from 1982 to 1990 are in table 6.1 (a) of the 1982 to 1992 annual edition. Figures for 1979 to 1981 are in the same table of the editions for earlier years: 1980 and 1981 figures are in the 1980-1990 edition, and 1979 figures are in the 1979-1989 edition.

Copies of these publications are in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Building Defects

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations his Department has received (a) about the amount of award given to plaintiffs who have successfully sued professional advisers who have been negligent in reporting defects in a building that the plaintiff has purchased and (b) about cases where the cost to the plaintiff of repairing the building is very much higher than the award given by the court because the award given by the court reflects what the value of the property would have been if the purchaser had known about the defect but was still willing to purchase but at a lower price; and if he will make proposals to enable courts to award the full reinstatement cost.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There has been correspondence between the Lord Chancellor's Department and my hon. Friend about the principles which apply in these cases. We do not propose to change those principles.

Community Charge Offences

Ms Corston: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases involving community charge offences have been taken to the High Court for judicial review, or are awaiting a date for a judicial review.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Schedule 4 to the Local Government Act 1988 provides for certain types of offence. The number of convictions and acquittals under these provisions referred for judicial review cannot be ascertained except at disproportionate cost. For the same reason, it is not possible to provide the number of judicial review cases involving the enforcement of community charge; there are, however, currently 169 such cases awaiting a hearing date.

PRIME MINISTER

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has in respect of the 1996 IGC relating to a written European constitution.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. None.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mahogany

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Attorney-General what action he intends to take in respect of imports of stolen Brazilian mahogany into the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: I understand that there are no restrictions on the import of Brazilian mahogany into the United Kingdom. The procedures for the investigation of criminal offences allegedly committed in relation to Brazilian mahogany are no different from those applicable to any other criminal offence, and the proper course, if it is believed that a criminal offence has been committed within the jurisdiction, is for the facts to be reported to the police.

WALES

Medical Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been paid by his Department as merit awards to medical consultants in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows:

Agriculture

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the counties served, the number of hectares and the number of farmers in each of his Department's divisional offices for agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is shown in the table.

[3] Farmers, partners and directors working whole-time or part-time on farm holdings on 1 June 1993. Excludes wives/husbands of farmers, partners and directors, even if the wives/husbands themselves may be partners or directors.

EMPLOYMENT

Railway Signalmen

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in real earnings of railway signalmen and white collar workers in the private sector since 1979; and what were the corresponding increases in productivity.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available occupational information from the new earnings survey in 1979 closest to that requested is for full-time railway signalmen and shunters and in 1993 for railway signal operatives, crossing keepers, shunters and points operatives. When adjusted for the increase in the retail prices index at April, the earnings of this group increased by 47·3 per cent. during the period.

The corresponding increase for private sector full-time non-manual employees was 51·6 per cent.

The information requested for productivity is not available.

University Graduates

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of graduates left university and took up careers in industry in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The table shows the number of first degree graduates who were in permanent employment in industry at the end of the calendar year in which they graduated. The figures are expressed as a percentage of all first degree graduates from United Kingdom universities and as a percentage of all those in permanent employment in the United Kingdom. They are derived from surveys published by the "Universities' Statistical Record" and exclude graduates from the former polytechnics and central institutions which received university status from 1992 onwards.

	Per cent. of all graduates	Per cent. of those in permanent employment
1990	12·3	28·2
1991	9·4	25·2
1993	7·8	21·3

Note: Industry is defined as including agriculture, the extractive industries, utilities, construction, transport and manufacturing.

Barnsley/Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the Barnsley/Doncaster training and enterprise council's budget for (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95 was devoted to the development of (i) self-employed businesses and (ii) new businesses.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1993-94, of the total training and enterprise council budget for Barnsley and Doncaster, business start-up accounted for 14·1 per cent. of expenditure. The planned expenditure for 1994-95 is 10·9 per cent. of the total TEC budget.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the information he receives from the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC about the operation of local enterprise companies; and what plans he has to increase the information available to him.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils do not provide information about the operation of local enterprise companies.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of his Department's staff who were seconded to the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC have taken advantage of the voluntary early retirement scheme while remaining in employment with the TEC; and at what cost to the voluntary early retirement scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many overseas persons are currently being trained under the auspices of the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC.

Miss Widdecombe: The training and enterprise council operating agreement precludes TECs from training overseas nationals who are subject to employment restrictions or to a time limit in their stay in Great Britain or both—other than refugees or asylum seekers.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions he has given to the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC in respect of when local enterprise companies may take steps to provide serviced sites.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils are not responsible for local enterprise companies.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made to the cost to public funds of the applicants of voluntary early retirement schemes to secondees from his Department to the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC, combined with the absence of a clawback mechanism for the former civil servants benefiting from the early retirement scheme but continuing in full-time employment with the TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no cost to public funds as I know of no such cases.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the companies used by the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC which are members of the Confederation of British Industry.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each of the last five financial years the date on which the Barnsley/Doncaster training and enterprise council was notified of its yearly budget; when it actually received its funding; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils are notified of their budgets after the public expenditure survey announcement each year. TECs are funded monthly in arrears in accordance with their agreed contract.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of women members of each TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of women on training and enterprise council boards is set out in the table. TECs are private companies and are responsible for the composition of their boards.

Astra Training Ltd.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the properties transferred to Astra Training Services Ltd. in 1990 as part of the privatisation of the skills training agency, and their market value at that time; what is the total sum received by the Government in respect of the sales of any of those properties since 1990; and what details have been supplied to him of the current ownership of each of the properties and the current status of the agreement made with Astra Training Services Ltd. regarding the clawback of any profit on the sales of the properties following the company's collapse.

Miss Widdecombe: The following 33 properties were transferred to Astra Training Services Ltd. in 1990 as part of the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency:

Barking	Medway
Basildon	Milton Keynes
Bellshill	North Staffs
Billingham	Norwich
Birmingham	Peterborough
Bradford	Plymouth
Bristol	Preston
Cheshire	Redruth
Dundee	Rochdale
Durham	Sheffield
Enfield	Southampton
Gloucester	Tyneside
Gwent	West Glamorgan
Hillingdon	West Sussex
Hull	Wigan
Irvine	Wrexham
Manchester

The market value of the properties at the time of the privatisation is a matter of commercial confidentiality. The Government have received no sum in respect of the sale of any of the above properties since 1990 and full details of the current owners of each of the properties have been supplied to the Department, along with confirmation that, in all but one case, the clawback conditions continue to apply to new owners.

None of the sales to date has triggered an actual clawback payment, due mainly to the low values generated in the depressed property market which has prevailed since privatisation.

In the one case where clawback no longer applies, Hillington, the Government accepted a settlement payment —£50,000—to remove the clawback provisions. This was on the advice of the Department's professional advisers, who saw no prospect of any actual clawback payment in a similar amount being triggered within the remaining clawback period.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council held on 22 June.

Mr. Hunt: I attended the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council held on 22 June in Luxembourg, and was accompanied by the Minister of State, Department of Employment, and the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt).

The Council agreed to adopt the directive on the protection of young workers and to maintain in full the United Kingdom's renewable option not to apply limits to the working time of children and adolescents in the United Kingdom. Three member states abstained.

The other 11 member states reached a common position on the draft European works councils directive. In accordance with the terms of the social protocol to the Maastricht treaty, this directive will not apply within the United Kingdom and employees based in the United Kingdom will not count towards the threshold which determines whether the directive applies to multinational companies. As a result, more than 200 British companies which would otherwise have been covered by the directive will not have to establish European works councils. Furthermore, the directive will not oblige any British company to extend European works councils to the United Kingdom. Unlike companies in the other 11 member states, British companies will remain entirely free to decide for themselves what arrangements are best for consulting their United Kingdom employees.

The Council reached agreement unanimously on a regulation to set up a European Health and Safety Agency, which will be sited in Bilbao. The main aims of the agency will be to promote and encourage the dissemination of information on health and safety matters.

The Council also unanimously reached a common position on a new European Community vocational training programme, to be called "Leonardo da Vinci". The proposal will replace a range of existing Community training programmes, PETRA, FORCE, EUROTECNET and COMETT. It will have a budget of 620 mecu over five years.

The Council heard progress reports on the follow-up work to the Delors White Paper and conclusions of the Brussels European Council on competitiveness, growth and employment, on the draft directive on chemical agents and on a commission communication on immigration and asylum policies.

The Council adopted unanimously a resolution on the promotion of equal opportunities for men and women through the action of the European structural funds.

The Commission's draft programme on social exclusion was withdrawn from the agenda by the presidency.

Disabled People

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) disabled men and (b) disabled women in (i) the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow and (ii) Scotland as a whole were registered as unemployed at the most convenient date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 June 1994]: The labour force survey asks people of working age if they currently have a health problem or disability which limits the kind of paid work they can do. Estimates based on answers to this question will include people with short-term or minor health problems and disabilities as well as those registered as disabled.

The latest LFS estimates for summer 1993 show that there were 26,000 such men and 10,000 such women who were International Labour Organisation unemployed and living in Scotland. The information is not available for parliamentary constituencies.

SCOTLAND

Regional and European Elections

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hours on average returning officers and depute returning officers at the regional and European elections are expected to devote to these additional duties; whether it is the normal practice for their employers to allow time off to allow them to perform these additional duties; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no information held centrally about hours worked by returning officers and their deputies when engaged on European parliamentary election work. The arrangements for local government elections are the responsibility of the returning officer and council concerned.

Shetland Oil Spill

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by the ecological steering group which he appointed on 26 January 1993 to undertake work in relation to the Shetland oil spill.

Sir Hector Monro: The ecological steering group on the oil spill in Shetland, which my right hon. Friend appointed last year under the chairmanship of Professor William Ritchie of Aberdeen university, has now completed its substantive report on the environmental effects of the spill. I expect to publish the report on Monday 27 June, when copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Detention

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the results of the research into detention in Scotland under section 2 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 and voluntary attendance at police stations are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A report entitled "Research into Detention and Voluntary Attendance of Suspects at Police Stations" is being published today.

The report shows that despite some difficulties in a small proportion of cases caused by the six-hour limit, the current provisions for detention and voluntary attendance generally work satisfactorily. I do not intend to bring forward any legislative proposals on this subject.

Copies of the report are available in the Library.

HEALTH

Emergency Dental Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family health authorities have been unable to provide emergency dental services in the period since December 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: General dental practitioners have an obligation under their terms of service to provide emergency cover to their registered patients. They may also offer emergency treatment to non-registered patients. Family health services authorities can make arrangements for emergency treatment for those patients who are not registered.

Where there are already adequate emergency services available from general dental practitioners, or the community or hospital dental services, there is no need for FHSAs themselves to make arrangements. All FHSAs report that they can help patients contacting them to receive national health service dental treatment.

The available information is shown in the table:

Total number of family health services authorities reporting that they were not providing or did not need to provide emergency dental services in each week since December 1992[1].

Generic Drugs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the savings which would have accrued to the NHS if in the financial year 1992-93 all prescribable drugs that were out of patent had been generically prescribed.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to quantify accurately the potential savings to the national health service because the price differentials between branded and generic drugs are subject to fluctuations, not all drugs that are out of patent have a generic equivalent and it is not always clinically appropriate to prescribe a generic drug.

Nursing Education

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority the numbers of entrants to initial pre-registration nursing education by course of study and by academic qualifications possessed by entrants in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority how many qualified NHS nurses and midwives, unqualified NHS nursing staff and nursing learners there were in each of the last five years; and what percentage each group was of the total NHS and midwifery staff in each year.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority the whole-time equivalent numbers of (a) agency and (b) bank nursing and midwifery staff employed in the national health service in each year for the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the tables.

The increase in bank nurses and midwives, together with the corresponding decrease in agency nurses and midwives, reflects the more widespread flexible working arrangements in the national health service for nurses and midwives.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten whole-time equivalent.
2. 'Others' includes staff in other statutory authorities.
3. Some totals may not equal the sum of components due to rounding.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority the numbers of whole-time equivalent NHS nursing and midwifery staff employed on each grade and pay point of the clinical grades, educational grades, and senior nursing and midwifery pay spine in each year for the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Community Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many home helps are employed by each local authority responsible for community care; and what is the ratio of home helps to population in each authority.

Mr. Bowis: The latest available data relates to whole time equivalent directly employed home helps, excluding home help organisers and assistant organisers as at 30 September 1993 and will be placed in the Library.

Clinical Standards

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to include information on clinical effectiveness and performance in the patients charter.

Dr. Mawhinney: The patients charter already includes the right to be given a clear explanation of the proposed treatment, alternatives and risks. This is an essential part of ensuring that the right treatment is provided in the right way to the right patients, thus promoting clinical effectiveness.

Asset Sales

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy to require regional health authorities to disclose in their accounts receipts from (a) the disposal of hospitals and (b) other large asset sales;

(2) if he will list references concerning income from the sale of hospitals in the audited accounts of the regional health authorities from 1984 to date.

Mr. Sackville: Since 1991, total capital receipts are disclosed in the cash flow statement of the annual accounts of regional health authorities. This complies with the financial reporting standards issued by the Accounting Standards Board. Prior to 1991, income from the sale of capital assets was disclosed in the notes to the accounts of regional health authorities.

NHS Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the total bed capacity of national health service providers is (a) unused and (b) used for private practice.

Mr. Sackville: Data about levels of occupancy of national health service beds are not held centrally. Information is held about the number of occupied bed days relating to each consultant episode. In total, there were over 45 million occupied bed days during 1991-92 in the general and acute sector in England. The number of bed days used by private patients is less than 1 per cent. of this total.

Child Care

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her response to the European Union's recommendation on child care.

Mr. Bowis: This relates to a requested response by March 1995.

Medical Consultants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority and by year for the last four years, the number of medical consultants per head of population; and how many of them worked in private practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table. The number of medical consultants who worked in private practice is not available centrally.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full-time equivalent consultants were employed in the NHS in each year since 1990-91.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Private Health Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will commission an independent inquiry to establish the full costs of providing private health care within the NHS; including the costs of capital investment and training of medical staff.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Doncaster Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date Mr. Graham Smith was informed that he was not to be reappointed as chairman of the Doncaster health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Mr. Smith was told informally at the beginning of March that he was not being recommended for reappointment as chairman of Doncaster health authority. I wrote to Mr. Smith on 28 March notifying him formally that he had not been reappointed.

Air Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the adequacy of her Department's risk level assessment for soot particles of an average hourly concentration of 250 micrograms per cubic metre.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not set a risk level for soot particles. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment's expert panel on air quality standards is currently considering a standard for particulates which will include soot particles. The possible health effects of particulates are under consideration by a sub-group of this Department's expert advisory Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her estimate of the health benefits of the reduction in air pollution to the safe levels defined by the World Health Organisation by the year 2000;

(2) what assessment she has made of the health implications of a delay of five years in the reduction of air pollution to the safe levels defined by the World Health Organisation.

Mr. Sackville: The World Health Organisation air quality guidelines were established to provide information on possible effects of air pollutants and as a basis for standard setting by individual countries. They were determined with a view to protecting sensitive individuals and include safety factors to account for variations in sensitivity between individuals. Modest excursions of air pollutants above the guidelines would not therefore be expected to have a large effect on health.

The assessment of the health effects of air pollution close to these levels remains uncertain. The Department's expert advisory committee on the medical effects of air pollutants has set up a sub-group to advise on the possible links between air pollutants and asthma and one to advise on the possible health effects of particulates including soot. The position will be reviewed in the light of its advice.

Targets

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will identify the second order priorities for the next round of the "The Health of the Nation" targets; and what consideration she has given to the inclusion of targets specifically relating to the need to reduce the incidence of heart failure as a discrete part of the coronary heart disease targets.

Mr. Sackville: There are no current plans for setting any new "The Health of the Nation" targets or key areas. The focus for the present is on consolidating work in the five existing key areas.

Almost all cases of heart failure are attributable either to coronary heart disease or hypertension, both of which have specific "The Health of the Nation" targets within the CHD/stroke key area. The prevention, early diagnosis and effective treatment of heart failure are subsumed within these existing targets.

GP Practices

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner practices there are in operation in each NHS region in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Region	Number of practices
Northern	523
Yorkshire	671
Trent	852
East Anglia	299
North West Thames	818
North East Thames	905

The data relate to 1 October 1993.

Intensive Therapy Units

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many intensive therapy units are in operation in each NHS region in England (a) in absolute numbers and (b) per head of population by region.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Region	Number of intensive therapy units (ITU's)[1]	Population[2] per ITU
Northern and Yorkshire	26	252,303
North West	30	219,673

North Thames	27	270,425
South Thames	13	510,530
South Western	24	246,625

[1] The number of intensive therapy units does not reflect accurately the level of provision as the number of beds in each unit varies considerably.

[2] Population figures based on 1990 Office of Population Censuses and Surveys data.

Dentistry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many dental deregistrations there were in the period 1985 to 1993;

(2) how many clients were registered with general dental practitioners in each year since 1983.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 June 1994]: Before the introduction of the new dental contract in October 1990, patients did not register with their dentists for treatment. Patients could not therefore be deregistered before that date. There were 687,765 deregistrations between 3 July 1992, the date deregistrations started to be counted, and 10 June 1994. Over a broadly similar period, total patient registrations rose by 1,049,178.

DEFENCE

Porton Down

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests and studies have been carried out by the chemical and biological warfare establishment at Porton Down using potassium; when these experiments were carried out; and what were the results and conclusions of these tests and studies.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Dr. Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what tests and studies have been carried out by the chemical and biological warfare establishment at Porton Down using potassium, when these experiments were carried out, and what were the results and conclusions of these tests and studies has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. Tests and studies on potassium, which is a highly reactive metal, have not been carried out at CBDE. Although potassium as a laboratory chemical has been used and continues to be used on an infrequent basis in various aspects of general organic chemical synthesis at CBDE Porton Down.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 26 January Official Report, columns 304-5, (1) how many service volunteers on average return voluntarily to Porton Down to take part in subsequent unrelated studies; whether they receive the same pro rata payment as volunteers who go only once; and how many times a service volunteer may go to Porton Down to participate in studies;

(2) what details from the study are recorded on the medical records of individual service volunteers who have participated in studies at the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down; what is his Department's policy on releasing the medical records of service volunteers to the individual concerned or to the individual's doctors if so requested; and how many medical records have been released in this way;

(3) how many service volunteers on average each year withdraw from studies at the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down after the nature of the intended study is explained to them; and whether they still receive payment;

(4) how many service volunteers are on average each year recalled to have their medical health checked; how such volunteers are chosen to be recalled; how many years after the study they are usually recalled; and whether they are recalled more than once;

(5) how many service volunteers on average each year are rejected as being unfit following the medical examination on arrival at the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down; and whether they still receive payment if they are rejected.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establisment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, columns 304-5, further questions relating to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment volunteer programme have been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures;

(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and

(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Service volunteers re-attend CBDE to take part in further studies according to their willingness and availability and are paid the same as volunteers who may only attend on one occasion. There is no restriction on the number of times a volunteer may return to CBDE to participate in studies but a volunteer cannot re-attend to participate in the same study for scientific and statistical reasons. Volunteers are paid to compensate them for the inconvenience of the tests carried out as part of the study; there is no difference in the amount of the payment for volunteers who have returned for a further study.

4. It has long been MOD policy to release Service volunteers' medical records to a patient's GP on a MEDICAL-IN-CONFIDENCE basis when they are needed for the management of a particular case. It is entirely up to the GP how much or how little of this information he conveys to his patient. The Service volunteer's medical documents will include the results of the investigations performed as part of the entry medical examination. There are no central records maintained of how many medical records have been released in such circumstances.

5. Over the past three years, only one volunteer has withdrawn from a study following detailed explanation of the protocol. He received payment in compensation for the inconvenience of the tests he had undertaken during the entry medical examination.

6. There is no set pattern of recalls or selection of volunteers for recall. The number of volunteers recalled and the time after the study are varied according to the objective of recalling the volunteers. The current practice is that all volunteers upon arrival at the Establishment are read a lay statement by a military officer which states that it is our policy to call back some volunteer subjects for re-testing from time to time to ensure that the techniques used give consistent and reproducible results and that no changes in the way we apply the tests have occurred with time." The recall of any volunteers to CBDE is recorded on their medical records.

7. About 5% of volunteers are rejected following review of their medical documents prior to their attendance at CBDE. They receive no payment. Between 5-10% of volunteers are rejected as unfit following the entry medical examination upon arrival at CBDE. They will receive payments in compensation for the inconvenience of the tests undertaken as part of the initial medical examination.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 163-64, (1) what was the purpose of experiments carried out on the nerve agent VX during the specified years at Nancekuke; what was the conclusion of these experiments; what quantities of the agent VX were used in these tests; when the results of these experiments were exchanged with the United States of America; with which other countries these results were shared; and under which defence agreements this information was exchanged;

(2) on which agents in the V series Nancekuke carried out research in the specified years; what was the purpose and conclusions of this research; when the results of these experiments were exchanged with the United States of America; and under which defence agreements this information was exchanged.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 11th January, Official Report, columns 163-4 for further information about the nerve agent VX and the V series research carried out at Nancekuke have been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The studies on VX during 1957-1976 were to determine whether or not this agent was producible in quantity and was stable when stored. Our records do not indicate the amount of VX but it is estimated to be less than 100 kgs.

4. The V series agents were substituted analogues of VX. The V series agents were investigated to determine whether they were stable and whether they could be produced effectively by an aggressor.

5. The results of this work have formed part of the chemical and biological defence programme and is part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Cooperation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what precautions are taken to ascertain whether individual service personnel have allergies before they are tested in the human volunteer programme at the chemical and biological warfare establishment at Porton Down;

(2) how long is the average stay for service volunteers who are involved in studies at the chemical and biological warfare establishment at Porton Down; how much payment each service volunteer receives; and how many tests each individual undergoes on average.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what precautions are taken to ascertain whether individual Service personnel have allergies before they participated in the human volunteer programme and how long is the average stay for Service volunteers who are involved in studies at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down; how much payment each Service volunteer receives; and how many tests each individual undergoes on average have been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and

(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. In order to ascertain whether individual Service personnel have allergies before they are tested in the human volunteer programme their Service medical documents are reviewed at CBDE before the volunteers attend for studies. No volunteer is accepted for studies at CBDE with a medical history suggesting allergic response to any substance. A recent, positive history of hay fever, asthma, eczema or other allergic phenomenon will lead to rejection at the initial medical examination, despite the fact that this may not be directly relevant to the study, or substances being used in the study being performed. Evidence or allergic response found at the initial medical examination, such as urticaria, or respiratory function tests suggesting an allergic airway response (asthma) will also lead to automatic rejection.

4. Service volunteers may remain at CBDE for between three days to four weeks depending on the study protocol in which they are participating. The majority of recent and current protocols involve a two or three week stay. Payment for the inconvenience associated with the tests in a study will vary according to the number of tests undertaken which may vary between about a minimum of 100 to a maximum of approximately 400; a payment is made for each test. The minimum amount presently paid is £142 after tax whereas the maximum is £350 after tax.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 306, what was the conclusion of the Biotechnology Committee's report into the implications of biotechnology for defence; how many members were then serving on the Biotechnology Committee; how many of them were academics; whether they were given access to the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 26th January, Official Report, column 306, what was the conclusion of the Biotechnology Committee's report into the implications of biotechnology for defence; how many members were then serving on the Biotechnology Committee; how many of them were academics; whether they were given access to the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Biotechnology Committee considered the impact that biotechnology would have on the threat from biological weapons and the ways in which this technology could be harnessed to enhance the United Kingdom's defence capability to detect and provide medical countermeasures against biological agents. The Biotechnology Committee consisted of 14 members of which 7 were from academia. They were given access to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down and to relevant documentation in order to carry out their task. Their report is classified and as such I am unable to arrange to place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official

Report, column 163, (1) how many service volunteers were used for tests at Porton Down in each year between 1964 and 1979; what was the purpose of those tests; and which chemicals and biological organisms were used in those tests;

(2) what were the reasons for the increases in the number of tests on service volunteers in 1980 and 1981; why only GB (Sarin) has been used in the tests since 1979; and what were the highest and lowest amounts of this agent used in these tests.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 163, asking how many volunteers were used for tests at Porton Down each year between 1964 and 1979 and the reasons for the increases in the number of tests in Service volunteers in 1980 and 1981 and why only GB (Sarin) has been used since 1979 have been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The number of Service volunteers used for studies at Porton Down in each year between 1964 and 1979 was as follows:

	Number
1964	298
1965	146
1966	149
1967	244
1968	263
1969	181
1970	327
1971	225
1972	358
1973	264
1974	304
1975	137
1976	254
1977	117
1978	104
1979	153

These volunteers have participated in studies carried out for the purposes outlined in paragraph 2 above. No volunteer studies have been carried out involving biological organisms.

4. The number of Service volunteers increased in 1980 and 1981 because of the need to carry out studies into aircrew protection. A number of studies were carried out to determine the lowest acceptable level for exposure to nerve agents.

5. GB (Sarin) is an example of a volatile nerve agent which has been used in all studies involving nerve agents since 1979. This agent has been used as it is representative of the range of nerve agents.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, columns 165-66, which of the studies on nerve gases, CR gas and CS gas were carried out in Australia; at which Australian defence establishment these tests were done; what was the purpose and conclusion of these tests; and in which years these tests were carried out.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 11th January, Official Report, columns 165-6, which of the studies on nerve gases, CR gas and CS gas were carried out in Australia, at which Australian defence establishment these test were done; what was the purpose and conclusion of these tests; and in which years these tests were carried out has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. In this work it has been necessary to evaluate the potential hazards from nerve gases and the irritants CR and CS. Our records do not indicate that any of our work on these materials has been carried out in Australia.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 303, (1) at which military establishments studies for the human volunteer programme have taken place other than the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down; when and for what reasons these studies were conducted at Porton Down; and what was the conclusion of these studies;

(2) when the detailed protocol was approved by the independent ethics committee and adopted by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment; and if he will publish this protocol covering the testing of volunteers.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 22 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 26 January, Official Response, column 303, when the detailed protocol was approved by the Independent Ethics Committee and adopted by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment; and if he will publish this protocol covering the testing of volunteers and at which military establishments studies for the human volunteer programme have taken place other than the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down; when and for what reasons these studies were conducted at Porton Down; and

3. A separate detailed protocol is prepared for each study; these are classified and are not published.

4. Our records indicate that studies involving Service volunteers have also taken place at RMCS Shrivenham, Dover, Bulford, The Cambridge Military Hospital and some collaborative work has been carried out with the Institute of Aviation Medicine. Such studies are carried out at these other Establishments when it is more convenient to do the studies there than to require the volunteers to come to Porton Down.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests and studies have been carried out by Porton Down to assess the so-called pepper sprays; when these tests and experiments were carried out; whether they involved humans and animals; what were the conclusions of these studies; when the results of these studies and tests were exchanged with other United Kingdom Government Departments and other countries; and with which other countries and United Kingdom Government Departments these results were shared.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what tests and studies have been carried out by Porton Down to assess the so-called pepper sprays; when these tests and experiments were carried out, whether they involved humans and animals; what were the conclusions of these studies; when the results of these studies and tests were exchanged and other United Kingdom government departments and other countries; and with which other countries and United Kingdom government departments these results were shared has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Our records indicate that no tests or studies have been carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment to assess so-called pepper sprays. We are aware that the active material in the so-called pepper sprays devices is capsaicin; this was studied by CBDE in the 1920s as a possible incapacitating agent. Our records do not indicate what detailed work was done with capsaicin.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department last negotiated with the United States of America to supply Britain with a shipment of nerve gas; what prompted the negotiations; and what were the conclusions of the negotiations.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when his Department last negotiated with the United States of America to supply Britain with a shipment of nerve gas; what prompted the negotiations; and what were the conclusions of the negotiation has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Our records indicate that the last transfer of nerve gas from the United States of America to Britain took place in June 1967 and was transported to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down. Our records do not indicate precisely when the negotiations took place but they are likely to have been in the course of the regular trilateral and quadlateral discussions with the US on chemical and biological defence, and to have taken place shortly before the transfer in 1967. The negotiations which led to this transfer took place to enable a collaborative programme of work into the stability and analytical research of nerve agents to be carried out. The results of this work was part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would therefore be part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Co-operation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many staff at the Chemical and Biological Warfare Establishment at Porton Down have been permanently disabled since 1964 due to work-related activity; in which year each occurred; what were the causes and circumstances of each one; and what was the establishment's response in terms of changing procedures to prevent such cases;

(2) how many staff at the Chemical and Biological Warfare Establishment at Porton Down have died due to work-related activity since 1964; in which year each death occurred; what were the causes and circumstances of each death; and what was the establishment's response in terms of changing procedures to prevent such deaths.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many staff at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down have died or been permanently disabled due to work-related activities since 1964; in which year each death occurred; what were the causes and circumstances of each death; and what was the Establishment's response in terms of changing procedures to prevent such deaths has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. Our records indicate that no members of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment staff have died or been permanently disabled due to a work related activity since 1964.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 397, with which other countries the results of the tests on tryptamines were shared; when these results were shared and through which defence agreement they were exchanged; which animals were tested with tryptamines; how many of each of these animals were used; and when Porton Down ended its work on tryptamines.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer to 27th January, Official Report, column 397-8, with which other countries the results of the tests on tryptamines were shared; when these results were shared and through which defence agreement they were exchanged; which animals were tested with tryptamines; how many of each of these animals were used; and when Porton Down ended its work on tryptamines has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Our records do not indicate precisely how many small laboratory animals were used in this work but they are likely to have involved rats, mice, rabbits and monkeys. The work involving tryptamines ceased in the mid 1960s and the results of this work was part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would therefore be part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Co-operation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down has done to assess the threat of genetically engineered toxins; what was the conclusion of the work; which toxins have been studied; what tests and studies have been involved in this work; which section of the establishment has been carrying out the work; whether the results have been published in open literature; and whether the results have been exchanged with any other country.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down has done to assess the threat of genetically-engineered toxins; what was the conclusion of the work; which toxins have been studied; what tests and studies have been involved in this work; which section of the Establishment has been carrying out the work; whether the results have been published in open literature; and whether the results have been exchanged with any other country has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Theoretical reviews have been carried out to evaluate the threat from genetically engineered toxins by the Defence Microbiology Division in conjunction with appropriate sections of the Establishment. The results are classified and have not been published in the open literature. In addition genetic engineering has been used as a tool in work to study medical countermeasures to toxins by, for example, detoxifying toxins in order to produce safer vaccines. This work was part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would therefore be part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Co-operation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone), on 11 January, Official Report, columns 163-64, what was the purpose of research on the nerve agent GD during the years outlined at Nancekuke; what was the conclusion of this research; what quantities of the nerve agent were used in this research; with which other countries the results of this research were shared and under which defence agreement this occurred.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his Answer to the honourable Member for Brent East on 11th January, Official Report, columns 163-64, what was the purpose of research on the nerve agent GD during the years outlined at Nancekuke; what was the conclusion of this research, what quantities of the nerve agent was used in this research; with which other countries the results of this research were shared and under which defence agreement this occurred has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out work on the nerve agent GD to evaluate the feasibility and hazard of the use of such an agent against the UK Armed Forces. The work enabled assessments to be made of the ease of acquisition of the precursors for GD, the case of stabilisation of GD and the shelf life of thickened GD. The quantity used was about 60 kg.

4. The results of this work were part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would have formed part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Co-operation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when female service personnel have taken part in tests under the human volunteer programme at Porton Down;

(2) how many service personnel have died while taking part in the human volunteer programme run by the Chemical and Biological Warfare Establishment at Porton Down since 1964; in which year each death occurred; what were the causes and circumstances of each death; and what was the establishment's response in terms of changing procedures to prevent such deaths;

(3) how many service personnel have been involved in accidents requiring hospital treatment while or after taking part in the human volunteer programme run by the Chemical and Biological Warfare Establishment at Porton Down since 1964; in which year each accident occurred; what were the causes and circumstances of each accident; and what was the establishment's response in terms of changing procedures to prevent such accidents.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,
(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and
(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Our records indicate that no Service personnel since 1964 have been involved in accidents requiring hospital treatment or have died while or after taking part in the human volunteer programme at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

Female Service personnel have been invited to participate in the human volunteer programme since May 1972 and first participated in the volunteer programme in November 1972.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work Porton Down has carried out to assess substituted hydroxylamines and hydrazines as an incapacitating agent; when this work started and ended; what was the conclusion of this work; which and how many animals were involved in this work; if the tests involved humans; with which other countries the results of the work were shared; when this information was shared; and under which defence agreement these results were exchanged.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Our records indicate that the results of the work on pyrroles carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has not been published in the open literature.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on 11 January, Official Report, column 167, why Australia requested each of the agents and materials from Britain; from which British military establishment each was transferred; to which Australian establishment each was transferred; how each was transported and what safety precautions were required; and what was the nature of the V agent and G agent intermediates.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 11 January, Official Report, column 167, why Australia requested each of the agents and materials from Britain; from which British military establishment each was transferred; to which Australian establishment each was transferred; how each was transported and what safety precautions were required; and what was the nature of the V agent and G agent intermediates has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The V agent intermediate was methyphosphonodichloride and the G agent intermediate was Di-Di which is a mixture of methylphosphonic difluoride and methylphosphonic dichloride. These were transferred from the then Chemical Defence Establishment at Nancekuke. Our records do not indicate why Australia requested the agents and materials from Britain or how they were transported to Australia. They were, however, transported to London, suitably packaged in accordance with the safety standards applicable at that time, for onward transportation to Australia.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) of 11 January, Official Report, columns 164-65, what work Porton Down has also done on assessing the hazard of tremorines; when this work started and ended, what was the conclusion of the work; where were the conclusions published; and with which other countries the results of the work were shared and when this information was exchanged.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24th June 1994:

3. In my reply of 11 January I advised the honourable Member for Brent East that the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment had carried out work on oxo-tremorine. Our records indicate that we have not carried out work on tremorines as such although pyrroles are substituted tremorines and my answers of 11 January 1994, Official Report, column 160 and 19 July 1993, Official Report, column 82 relate to pyrroles.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research projects relating to genetic engineering have been funded in universities and polytechnics by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since 1979; what are the titles of these projects and what was the duration and value of each project.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many research projects relating to genetic engineering have been funded in universities and polytechnics by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since 1979, what are the titles of these projects and what was the duration and value of each project has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. A total of seven research projects relating to genetic engineering have been funded in universities and polytechnics by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since 1979. The details are as follows:

Gene probes for flaviruses	3 years
Plasmid stability in bacillus	3 years
Genetic control of translational fidelity in yeast	3 years
Eukaryotic expression vectors	3½ years
Mapping of bacterial proteins	4 years
Bacillus brevis for biosynthesis of heterogeneous proteins	3 years

3. The total value of these contracts was £1,059K; it is not our normal practice to reveal the value of individual contracts as the disclosure of the value is left to the individual universities and polytechnics to make as they feel appropriate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which years Porton Down has tested (a) CR gas and (b) CS gas on service personnel in the human volunteer programme; what was the purpose of these tests; how the gas was administered to the volunteers in both cases; what was the conclusion of these tests for each of the gases; how many service volunteers were tested with each of the gases; and where the results of these tests are published in open literature.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Our records indicate that 460 Service volunteers were exposed to the irritant CS during the period 1959-1973 and 190 Service volunteers were exposed to CR during the period 1963-1976.

4. The purpose was to carry out skin and eye sensitivity tests, food palatability tests, physiological tests to determine the effects on the respiratory and cardiovascular systems and exercise testing to determine the degree of incapacitation following exposure. The CS and CR was administered in controlled amounts in an exposure chamber or to the skin in the form of a solution.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under their framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what work Porton Down has carried out to assess benzimidazoles as an incapacitating agent; when this work started and ended; what was the conclusion of the work; which and how many animals were tested during this work; how many service volunteers were tested; and where the results of the work were published in open literature has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. We have no record of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment having carried out work on benzimidazoles as an incapacitating agent.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the numbers of staff and budget of the defence microbiology division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has increased or decreased since the division was set up;

(2) what publications have been published by scientists in the defence microbiology division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since 1986; in which scientific journals they were published; and on what date they were published;

(3) what are the current priorities of the defence microbiology division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

Mr. Hanley: These matters are for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, to write to the hon. Member. There is also an annex listing research publications by scientists in the defence microbiology division, which will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what are the current priorities of the Defence Microbiology Division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, whether the numbers of staff and budget of the Defence Microbiology Division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has increased or decreased since the division was set up, what publications have been published by scientists in the Defence Microbiology Division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since 1986; in which scientific journals they were published; and on what date they were published have been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The primary purpose of the Defence Microbiology Division at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down is to carry out work on defence against pathogenic micro-organisms and toxins that are assessed to present a threat to the United Kingdom Armed Forces. The work of this division contributes to the United Kingdom programme on chemical and biological defence which is aimed at ensuring that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The current priorities of the Defence Microbiology Division are to investigate technologies for the rapid detection and identification of biological warfare agents and to investigate medical countermeasures against their use.

4. Since its establishment in 1979 the numbers of staff and budget of the Defence Microbiology Division have increased. Our records indicate that the research publications by scientists in the Defence Microbiology Division since 1986 are listed in the Annex.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the relationship between his answer of 29 March, Official Report, columns 732-33, and his oral statement of 27 January, Official Report, column 444, regarding his visiting South Yorkshire.

Mr. Hanley: There seems to have been an error in the Official Report at column 444. As the hon. Member has been informed subsequently on a number of occasions, my visit of 27 January was to North Yorkshire.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations, aircraft types involved, altitude and determination of cause, for all category C air misses involving military aircraft over the United Kingdom in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Hanley: I will arrange for a copy of the list of all category C air miss reports involving military aircraft over the United Kingdom in 1988 and 1989, which have been investigated by the joint air miss working group to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the action taken in response to the joint air miss working group recommendations in its report on air miss No. 46/93.

Mr. Hanley: The national air traffic services in conjunction with the appropriate MOD staffs have taken the requisite actions called for by the joint air miss working group in its recommendations. No discrepancies or inaccuracies were found in the United Kingdom and NATO airborne early warning [illegible].

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library brief descriptions of the circumstances of all category A air misses involving military aircraft for each year since 1989.

Mr. Hanley: Lists of all categories of air misses involving military aircraft since 1988 have recently been placed in the Library of the House. Since that time, there have been a further three category A air misses, details of which will be placed in the Library shortly. The lists detail the date, location, risk category, aircraft type and descriptions of the cause.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the category A air miss 159/93 on 2 November 1993 between a Jet Ranger 206 helicopter and an RAF Tornado, (b) the category B air miss 148/93 on 18 October 1993 between a Jet Ranger 206 helicopter and an RAF Tucano and (c) the category C air miss 151/93 on 12 October 1993 between a Jet Ranger 206 helicopter and an RAF Tornado.

Mr. Hanley: All reported air misses are investigated by the joint air miss working group—JAWG. The reports of the investigations into these three incidents will be included in the next JAWG "Analysis of Airmisses in the UK" due to be published in the autumn. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House in the usual way.

Royal Air Force (Bosnia)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current interval between assignments to duties over Bosnia for Royal Air Force airborne warning and communication system crews; and what deferments of AWACS crew training tasks have taken place as a result of meeting commitments to providing crews for Bosnian operations;

(2) what are the current (a) planned and (b) actual intervals between deployments for operational duties over Bosnia, northern Iraq and southern Iraq, for individual members of aircrew in (a) Tornado GR1/1A squadrons, (b) Tornado F3 squadrons, (c) Harrier squadrons, (d) Jaguar squadrons and (e) Royal Navy Sea Harrier squadrons; and for what period of time aircrew are assigned to these duties on each occasion.

Mr. Hanley: Intervals between deployments of aircrew overseas for operations related to former Yugoslavia and Iraq vary for a variety of reasons. On the assumption that the present pattern of deployments continues unchanged, the number of deployments overseas and the time spent on operational duty by individual RAF aircrew in a full year would on average be of the following order:

Aircraft/Theatre	Average number in a full year of
	Deployments	Weeks spent on operational duties
E-3D: former Yugoslavia	8	16
Tornado GR1/1A: Iraq	0·5	3
Tornado F3: former Yugoslavia	0·67	8

Aircraft/Theatre	Average number in a full year of: Deployments	Weeks spent on operational duties
Harrier: Iraq	1·33	8
Jaguar: former Yugoslavia	2	16

Royal Navy aircrew flying the Sea Harrier for former Yugoslavia operations deploy to the Adriatic with their ship for about six months at a time. Individuals would not spend the whole of this period on operations, and could expect there to be at least six months between deployments.

The E-3D force is able to meet its operational commitments and although essential crew training is being achieved, the period for initial crew familiarisation has increased.

Night Vision Goggles

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of disorientation have been reported by aircrew flying with night vision goggles since this equipment was first employed, in each of the flying services.

Mr. Hanley: There has been one reported incident, involving an Army Air Corps helicopter, attributable to aircrew disorientation when wearing night vision goggles.

Air Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the titles, dates and locations of planned major air exercises over the United Kingdom for the remainder of 1994.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Exercise Title	Date	Location
Highland Cardinal	4-8 July 1994	Mid Wales
Welsh Cleric	11-15 July 1994	Mid Wales
Brilliant Foil	3-7 October 1994	All of United Kingdom mainland
Green Blade	3-11 November 1994	South of Scotland and Borders

Tornado

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the date of the incident in which a Royal Air Force Tornado suffered an engine fire on take-off from Canadian air forces base Goose bay in 1993; what was the damage to the aircraft; where the repairs were undertaken; and what was the cause of the accident.

Mr. Hanley: The incident occurred on 20 July 1993. The aircraft was repaired at Goose bay after sustaining heat damage to the engines, rudder and one taileron. The cause of the incident was a servicing error during replacement of the right engine reheat fuel control unit.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average cost per flying hour, including apportionment of fixed costs, of flying the Tornado GR1 aircraft (a) from RAF Bruggen and (b) from bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: Fixed costs are spread over four squadrons in the case of RAF Bruggen and two in the case of United Kingdom bases. At 1993-94 prices, the average cost per flying hour of a Torndado GR1, operated from (a) RAF Bruggen is £18,952 and (b) United Kingdom bases is £21,673. These figures include fixed costs and those relating to depreciation, interest on capital and administration.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what annual number of flying hours per member of (a) Tornado GR1, (b) Tornado F3, (c) Jaguar and (d) Harrier aircrew was provided for in Royal Air Force fuel allocations for each financial year since 1990-91.

Mr. Hanley: The average number of flying hours expected to be flown by each Tornado GR1, Tornado F3, Jaguar and Harrier aircrew member in 1990-91 and 1991-92 was 240 hours. In financial years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95 the forecast average was 222 hours. Those flying hours were provided for in the Royal Air Force fuel allocations for the years concerned.

HMS Valiant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the result of the tests carried out on 11 May on the Royal Navy crew of HMS Valiant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The results of the tests carried out on a representative number of the crew of HMS Valiant on 11 May showed no abnormalities.

NATO Peacekeeping Manual

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the academic bodies consulted in the preparation of NATO's new manual on peacekeeping.

Mr. Hanley: Two NATO documents on peace support operations are in preparation. Academic bodies have not been consulted as part of this process.

Low flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low flying sorties carried out by Germany-based aircraft of No. 2 Group in 1993 in (a) German airspace, (b) the United Kingdom low flying system and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Hanley: Aircraft of No. 2 group RAF strike command flew 5,228 sorties in the United Kingdom low flying system in 1993. The upper limit for low flying in German airspace is 1,500 feet. However for the purposes of statistical consistency No. 2 group now apply the United Kingdom upper limit of 2,000 feet when maintaining low flying records. Such records cover fast jet aircraft only. The number of sorties flown in Germany and elsewhere during 1993 were as follows:

	Fast jet sorties below 2,000 feet
Germany	2,229
Elsewhere	1,070

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the unauthorised flight in the United Kingdom low flying system of three F-16s of the royal Danish air force on 14 December 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The aircraft had been deployed to RAF Leuchars to carry out low flying training. On their return flight to Denmark they flew at low level without authorisation and breached an avoidance area. Details of the incident have been passed to the royal Danish air force for appropriate action.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about alleged low flying incidents occurring (a) in mid-Wales (b) in the whole of Wales and (c) throughout the United Kingdom he has received during each year since 1991 and in the current year to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The number of inquiries or complaints relating to military low flying which my Department received in each year since 1991 to May 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, from addresses in the county of Powys, Wales and the United Kingdom are as follows:

Year	Powys	Wales	United Kingdom
1991	108	791	4,846
1992	199	904	6,295
1993	110	556	5,738

[1] Up to 31 May 1994.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the first low-level overland training area for air defence aircraft was established; what facilities these areas are designed to provide which were not previously available to air defence units: if he will list the locations of each such area in the United Kingdom, together with their height limits, hours of operation and arrangements for limits on aircraft numbers and for deconfliction from other air traffic; and if he will place in the Library a map showing the location and extent of the low-level overland training areas.

Mr. Hanley: The low-level operational training area —LOTA—system was established on 3 April 1992 in order to provide better co-ordination between air defence aircraft engaged in low level intercept training and offensive aircraft using the United Kingdom low flying system. The system does not provide for any form of training not previously available but allows aircrew to register their intention to train in a specific LOTA. This facilitates co-ordination of sorties and thereby enhances training opportunities. LOTAs are not subject to special regulations, but any military flying below 2,000 feet within them is subject to the normal regulations of the United Kingdom low flying system. There are seven LOTAs; I am arranging for a map showing their location to be placed in the Library of the House.

Eurofighter

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum runway length necessary at any base to be used regularly by the Eurofighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to release operational information.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where he proposes pilot training for the Eurofighter aircraft will take place.

Mr. Hanley: A decision on the location of Eurofighter 2000 pilot training has not yet been taken.

Training Areas

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the (a) statutory requirements and (b) requirements set out in service orders for the operating authorities of military firing ranges and training areas to report infringements of danger area airspace.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 441, how the percentage of United Kingdom herds with adult breeding cattle that had experienced at least one case of BSE, as given in "Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy in Great Britain, A Progress Report", published by her Department in March 1994, was calculated; and if she will give the percentage for the latest available date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figure in the progress report is for Great Britain, not the United Kingdom, and is the best estimate available using information collected by the state veterinary service about confirmed cases of BSE and agricultural census data.

The percentage of herds that have experienced BSE is calculated by using data from the agricultural census on the number of holdings with dairy cows plus the number of holdings with beef cows as the denominator. This introduces a small error as those holdings with both dairy and beef cows will be counted twice. Those categories will also include some holdings with non-adult animals intended for breeding but not separately identifiable. As the agricultural census collects data on "holdings" only—rather than herds—and information on BSE database relates to "herds", counting of some holdings twice is considered to give the most accurate estimate for the denominator, particularly as each holding may comprise two or more herds.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the amount of land in hectares, (b) the number of farmers and (c) the cost of the five year set-aside scheme in (i) 1993-94 and (ii) 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Payments to farmers in England under the five-year set-aside scheme for the financial year 1993-94 were some £20·7 million. Those payments relate primarily to land set-aside during the scheme year October 1992 to September 1994 under 3,360 agreements covering some 112,000 hectares. Estimated expenditure for 1994-95 is £14·1 million in respect of 2,130 agreements for the 1993-94 scheme year covering some 72,000 hectares. The reduction is the result of some farmers completing their five-year agreements and others taking advantage of the option to terminate early in order to join the arable area payments scheme.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been paid out under the arable area payments scheme in (a) each county and (b) each region for linseed in 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: No arable area payments have yet been made in respect of the 1993-94 scheme year.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 636, concerning the amounts paid out under the arable area payments scheme in 1993-94, whether these figures included payments for linseed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: No. Those figures related to the 1992-93 scheme year. Linseed was not incorporated into the arable area payments scheme until 1993.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the benefit to consumers in the United Kingdom of the 1992 CAP reform agreement; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: At the time of the CAP reform agreement, it was estimated that, when the reform is fully implemented, the annual costs imposed by the CAP on consumers should be around £8 billion lower for the EC as a whole, and around £1 billion lower for the United Kingdom.

Regional Service Centres

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the counties served, the number of hectares and the number of farmers in each of her Ministry's regional service centres; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The information requested in respect of the Ministry's nine regional service centres is set out in the table.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg from 20 to 23 June; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This meeting of the Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, had a full discussion over four days of the Commission's proposals for farm support prices for 1994-95 and related measures. In the early hours of the final day, the Presidency tabled a final compromise the costs of which were assessed by the Commission to be at the limit of the funds available. Despite this, several member states regrettably continued to press for further measures involving additional expenditure. When the Presidency called a vote Germany, France and Luxembourg rejected the package as a whole and several others objected to parts of it. The proposals were accordingly not adopted and it now falls to the German Presidency to try to break the impasse.

The Council also discussed a proposal concerning the welfare of animals in transit. Along with Germany, Belgium, Netherlands and Denmark, I expressed concern that, although the proposal contained significant improvements over the present rules, including a strengthening of enforcement, it failed to go far enough. As a result of our pressure, the Commission subsequently gave a commitment to come forward by 1 July 1995 with a further proposal on maximum journey limits.

The Council unanimously agreed three directives establishing certain maximum pesticide residue levels in cereals and products of animal and plant origin, a decision establishing rules on the storage and marketing of eggs, a regulation fixing the support prices for certain fruits and vegetables for July 1994, and a regulation establishing a Community scheme for plant variety rights. No decision was reached on the site of the European Community plant variety office, and this issue will be considered further during the German Presidency. I urged the Council to locate the office at Cambridge in view of that city's unique blend of scientific and technical expertise and excellent communications.

The Council also agreed by qualified majority a directive establishing uniform principles for the evaluation of plant protection products—Germany and the Netherlands voting against—and a decision designed to provide better financial discipline and prioritisation of programmes for assistance under the veterinary fund. I voted against this proposal because of an associated Council resolution whose wording contained the potential to undermine overall budgetary control.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions she has had concerning the unpublished European Commission report on the reform of the common agriculture policy; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her reply, 24 March 1994, c. 372]: The study to which my hon. Friend referred has still not been published. However an article by Mr. Knud Munk, an economist employed by the Commission's DG II, which appears to cover similar ground, has recently been published in the Journal "European Economy". Copies of this article have been placed in the House Library.

The basic thrust of the article is to point to the attractions of nationally funded direct payments to farmers, de-coupled from production, as a replacement for other forms of agricultural support.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 27 June 1994

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Court of Justice

24. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if he will take steps to publish a record of the accumulated legal costs borne by the United Kingdom in the cases initiated against Her Majesty's Government in the European Court of Justice.

The Solicitor-General: Legal costs excluding travel and subsistence totalled approximately £90,000 in nine out of the 10 cases brought since 1 January 1986.

Prosecutors' Code

25. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to make the revised code for prosecutors known to the public.

The Attorney-General: The revised "Code for Crown Prosecutors" was published by the Director of Public Prosecutions on 21 June 1994. It has been widely distributed to those with an interest in the criminal justice system. Copies are available from Crown Prosecution Service headquarters.

Lenient Sentences

26. Mr. Spring: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases have been referred to him in the last 12 months as being unduly lenient sentences.

The Attorney-General: One hundred and sixteen sentences have been considered and I have applied for leave to refer 46 as appearing to me to be unduly lenient.

Crown Prosecution Service

27. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to make an official visit to the Crown Prosecution Service in Chester to discuss the work of the office; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has no plans to visit the Crown Prosecution Service in Chester, but I shall be visiting offices of the Crown Prosecution Service in the north-west area, of which Chester is a part, in the near future.

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings Inquiry

28. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General when and in what form he expects to publish Sir John May's inquiry into the Guildford and Woolwich bombings case; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and I expect to publish the report shortly.

PC Guscott

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Attorney-General what change of policy will be made by the Crown Prosecution Service as a result of the case of PC Guscott at Bridgwater magistrates court.

The Attorney-General: The CPS is aware of the difficulties and dangers which police officers face in their work. This is a factor which is always taken into account in deciding whether the prosecution of a police officer is in the public interest. The public interest however also demands that officers should conduct themselves within the law. These cases are considered with great care according to their individual merits. The DPP does not consider any change of approach to be necessary.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to review the Crown Prosecution Service guidelines on dealing with cases of racial harassment.

The Attorney-General: The revised edition of the "Code for Crown Prosecutors" makes it clear that a prosecution is likely to be needed if, among other considerations, the offence was motivated by any form of discrimination against the victim's ethnic or national origin.

SCOTLAND

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the Lords Advocate and Solicitors-General who have held office since 1964.

Criminal Justice

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made with the review of the Scottish criminal justice system; and what conclusions he has reached on proposals for improving the delivery of justice in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have today laid before Parliament and published a White Paper entitled "Firm and Fair" which sets out the Government's proposals for reform of the Scottish criminal justice system. The White Paper is the culmination of a wide-ranging review of the Scottish criminal justice system and criminal legal aid, in which I have sought the views of all those with a genuine interest in the delivery of justice in Scotland. The response to the four consultation papers we issued was very encouraging. We have received a large number of thoughtful comments which have been carefully considered. The White Paper contains the Government's conclusions following that consideration.

The White Paper also reports on our consideration of those recommendations of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice which were of relevance to Scotland and includes proposals on other aspects of the Scottish criminal justice system which were not part of the main review exercise.

The proposals in the White Paper seek to ensure that offenders are quickly identified, brought to account and punished and that all those who come into contact with the criminal justice system, whether as victims, witnesses or jurors, are dealt with fairly and sensitively. The proposals include action to tighten up bail procedures and to deal with people who commit offences while on bail, changes to pre-trial procedures, the operation of the jury system, the powers of the courts and appeals procedures.

On certain issues, I have concluded that there should be no change or that further work is necessary. One of the most controversial issues on which I consulted was the future of the not proven verdict. This provoked a healthy public debate. The clear weight of opinion was, however, in favour of retention and I have decided that the three verdicts, including not proven, should remain.

I also consulted on the need for change in the Appeal Court's consideration of appeals and the handling of alleged miscarriages of justice in Scotland, in the light of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice for a new independent review authority for England and Wales. The response to the consultation was inconclusive and, given the complexity and importance of these related issues, I have decided to appoint an independent committee, which will include a senior member of the judiciary, to consider both these matters in the Scottish context and to report to me. I shall announce the membership and remit of the Committee soon.

The consultation exercise has been productive and worthwhile. I believe that the proposals contained in this White Paper will command widespread support. I also believe that they will significantly improve the delivery of justice in Scotland. Where legislation is required to implement the proposals contained in the White Paper, it will be brought forward at the next available opportunity.

ENVIRONMENT

Appointments

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many and what proportion of (a) chairmen, (b) chief executives and (c) board members of (i) urban development corporations and (ii) housing action trusts are women.

Mr. Gummer: The number and proportion of women in urban development corporations and housing action trusts are as follows:

	Number of Women	Proportion of Women
		Per cent.	Per cent.
(i) Urban Development Corporations
(a) Chairmen	0	0
(b) Chief Executives	0	0
(c) Board Members	22	18
(ii) Housing Action Trusts
(a) Chairmen	1	20
(b) Chief Executives	0	0	(16[1])
(c) Board Members	22	46

[1] The acting chief executive at the shadow Stonebridge housing action trust is a woman. The parliamentary process to establish the HAT is currently underway.

Sweetloves Reservoir, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of North West Water plc's actions in respect of the preservation of the amenity values of Sweetloves reservoir, Bolton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have considered carefully the concerns expressed by my hon. Friend over North West Water's proposed redevelopment of the Sweetloves reservoir, together with the information provided by the company to my Department. While I consider that it would have been better if the company had carried out consultations prior to draining the reservoir and bringing forward its redevelopment proposals, I am satisfied that failure to do so does not of itself constitute a breach of the company's statutory environmental duties under the Water Industry Act 1991. I have however written to North West Water informing it of my serious concerns over its handling of this matter.

Quarries, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy relating to the development of quarries within the area of Doncaster metropolitan borough council.

Mr. Baldry: Policy guidance on the provision to be made for minerals in development plans is given in minerals planning guidance notes 1 and 6. In particular MPG 6 sets out regional apportionments for meeting projected demand for aggregates to 2006. In drawing up policies and proposals in their development plans for meeting the demand for aggregates and other minerals, mineral planning authorities should have regard to the local apportionments for the supply of aggregates and the other guidance in MPG 6.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of South Yorkshire metropolitan borough councils in rank order their full-time equivalent number of employees per thousand of population.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is not available centrally. However, figures are available for the total number of employees per thousand of population. These are:

	Staff[1]	Population[2] (thousands)	Staff per thousand population
Barnsley	11,386	225	50·6
Doncaster	14,718	294	50·1
Rotherham	12,581	255	49·3
Sheffield	22,959	531	43·2

Homelessness

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority, housing association and voluntary sector hostel bedspaces for single homeless people there were in England on (a) 31 December 1993 and (b) 31 March 1994, or the most recent figures available.

Sir George Young: Information on short-life accommodation managed by housing associations in England, including property owned by a local authority, is published for the year ending 31 March 1993 by the Housing Corporation in table 13.1, page 47 of "Housing Associations in 1993", an analysis of the annual statistical survey, part 1, general report. No information is held centrally on short-life accommodation owned by local authorities and not managed by housing associations. A copy of the report is held in the Library.

Domestic Heating Radiators

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on accidents arising from surface heat of domestic heating radiators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment does not keep statistics on this subject. In general, reducing surface heat to a level which is completely safe will also result in living space temperature falling to a level incompatible with comfort.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations cover the surface temperature of domestic heating radiators.

Mr. Atkins: There are no regulations relating specifically to the surface temperature of domestic heating radiators. In sheltered accommodation, such as nursing homes, the relevant local authority has responsibility for setting a maximum surface temperature for radiators.

Noise Pollution

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans she has to increase the powers of local authorities and affected persons to take action against noisy neighbours.

Mr. Atkins: Local authorities and individuals already have a range of powers to tackle neighbour noise nuisance. Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, local authorities can serve abatement notices to control noise from domestic and other premises which they judge to be a statutory nuisance. These powers have recently been extended by the Noise and Statutory Nuisance Act 1993 to control certain types of noise in the street, including misfiring vehicle alarms. Contravention of abatement notices can lead to substantial fines.

In addition, a number of local authorities have successfully confiscated equipment such as hi-fis and stereos where an abatement notice has been ignored. Individuals can also take their own action in the magistrates' court to have a noise nuisance abated or they can take civil action.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the current distribution of standard spending assessments in reflecting need to spend in (a) deprived local authority areas and (b) Birmingham.

Mr. Curry: The standard spending assessment formulae, which apply to authorities throughout England, contain many indicators related to the additional need to spend in deprived local authority areas. As well as the economic and social indices which reflect general needs, there are indicators such as the proportion of children in lone-parent families or in families receiving income support, homeless households, households living in non-self-contained accommodation and elderly residents with a long-term illness. These indicators have been chosen after detailed statistical analysis of the patterns of local authorities' spending.

Housing

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the analysis of English housing fitness contained in the report "English Homes—A National Asset?" presented to him in March; and what proposals he intends to make in response.

Sir George Young: The analysis of housing fitness contained in the report "English Homes—A National Asset?" is based on the 1991 English house condition survey, published by the Department in September 1993. The recommendations of the report are being considered in the context of the Department's current review of the future of private housing renewal programmes.

Stadium, Stoneham

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the report of the public inquiry into the proposed community stadium at Stoneham, Southampton.

Mr. Baldry: It is hoped to announce the decision shortly.

New Forest

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses to the Department of the Environment's consultation paper "The New Forest: The Government's Proposals", published in September 1992, were received by the Department before the end of 1992; and of these responses what proportion supported the Government's proposals that (a) statutory designation should be given to the area broadly related to the heritage area proposed by the New Forest committee and that (b) a planning regime similar to that which applies in the national parks and the Broads should apply to this area.

Mr. Atkins: We received 209 responses to our consultation paper on the New Forest before the end of 1992. Sixty per cent. of these responses addressed the issue of a statutory designation for an area related to the New Forest heritage area, of which 84 per cent. supported the proposal for a statutory status which would bring with it a planning regime similar to that which applies in the national parks and the Broads.

Objective 5b Grants

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps his Department is taking to provide advice and support to local authorities in preparing bids for objective 5b grant;

(2) in which part of his Department objective 5b bids are handled.

Mr. Baldry: Applications for funding under objective 5b of the European structural funds will be handled by secretariats located at the appropriate Government office in each region.

Local authorities and other potential applicants to use objective 5b funding may obtain advice and guidance from the appropriate regional office. The European Commission is currently considering proposals for the use of the funds in each of the eligible areas, which have been prepared by the Government offices in consultation with local partnerships including the local authorities. When agreed by the European Commission, these single programming documents will provide the framework within which decisions on project applications will be made, and further guidance will be made available to interested organisations.

City Challenge

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards voluntary agencies funded through City Challenge which operate unsatisfactory employment practices and procedures.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions as to which agencies and projects City Challenge supports are matters for individual partnerships set up under the initiative and the appropriate local authorities. As far as possible, the partnerships should be satisfied that the agencies operate within the requirements of the law.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Durum Wheat, Italy

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the discrepancy between the claimed and the satellite measured areas of durum wheat in Italy.

Mr. Jack: I understand that work on remote sensing commissioned by the European Commission in 1990 identified some discrepancies between the actual and declared areas of durum wheat in Italy. Appropriate action was taken by the Italian authorities. Remote sensing can make a useful contribution to preventing fraud and the Commission is continuing to encourage its use in appropriate circumstances.

Nutrient Intakes

Ms Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the recommended 1991 daily intake, reference nutrient intake and lower reference nutrient intake, for children of different ages; and what percentage these figures represent of the values recommended in 1979.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

Information concerning the reference nutrient intake —RNI—the estimated average requirement—EAR—and the lower reference nutrient intake—LRNI—for 33 nutrients were published in the 1991 Report on Health and Social Subjects No. 41 "Dietary Reference Values (DRV) for Food Energy and Nutrients for the United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the Library.

It is not possible to establish what percentage the 1991 DRVs represent of the 1979 recommended daily amounts —RDA—because figures are not comparable in the two reports.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Benefits

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will set out in tabular form the non-contributory benefits and contributory benefits, where the rates of contribution are the same, available to Members of the European Parliament and hon. Members of this House on ceasing their employment, setting out the reasons for any differences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: A resettlement allowance is payable to Members of the House in accordance with the Resolution of 22 May 1991 at rates that vary between 50 and 100 per cent. of annual salary according to age and length of service. Our intention is that the same terms should be available to Members of the European Parliament. Accordingly, the Home Secretary laid an order on 24 June making certain changes to their scheme in line with improvements already made in the scheme for Members of this House.

Members of this House and Members of the European Parliament pay contributions of 6 per cent. of salary for pensions at retirement, as distinct from cessation of employment. The Home Secretary laid an order on 24 June to make certain changes to the scheme for MEPs to ensure that the benefits are the same for both schemes.

PRIME MINISTER

Broadcasting Act

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up a Royal Commission to investigate the workings of the Broadcasting Act; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. However we are keeping the working of the Act under review.

Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what instructions are given to security staff at No. 10 Downing street for dealing with beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems with beggars have been experienced in the last three months.

The Prime Minister: None, in both cases.

British Pension Rights

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received since 1 January 1993 calling for the unfreezing of British state retirement pensions in those countries where British pensioners are denied annual upratings.

The Prime Minister: I have received numerous representations.

Press Releases (Recycled Paper)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the Government Departments which issue press releases on recycled paper; and what percentage of press releases from each department are on recycled paper.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

The use of recycled and environmentally friendly paper for the issue of press releases is a matter for individual Departments. However, the Government's policy, as set out in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance", is to use its influence as a major consumer. It discriminates positively in favour of recycled and environmentally-friendly products and will use recycled or environmentally friendly paper wherever this is available, of adequate quality and represents value-for-money.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Konver Programme

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the extension of the Konver programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Commission announced a second Konver initiative for the period 1994-97, to assist the regeneration or areas affected by job losses due to defence changes. It is one of 13 community initiatives to be financed from the European structural funds.

These funds will contribute £380 million to Konver II; the allocation for the United Kingdom, and Gibraltar, will be known in July. The eligible areas should be determined in September; they will, as before, include areas other than those designated for objectives 1, 2 and 5*(b)* of the funds. A general programme describing the intended application of Konver II in the United Kingdom, and Gibraltar, is due to be prepared by October, and then needs to be agreed by the Commission. It is therefore unlikely that individual applications for grant can be considered before the new year.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what stage of preparation are draft contracts for the contracting out of the Insolvency Service's mechanical processing work.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No decision has yet been taken on whether to contract out this work. Drafting of any contracts has not, therefore, begun.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the prosecution rate for inadequate accounting records by the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Stoy Hayward Consulting was invited to bid for the second phase of the work in a single tender action.

United Kingdom Manufacturers (Investment)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has that United Kingdom manufacturers are investing in increased capacity to increase exports and displace imports; and if he will publish a list of the industries in which such investment is taking place.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on the reasons for investment by a sample of United Kingdom manufacturing industry is contained in the CBI "Industrial Trends Survey", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

European Regional Funds

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has allocated a budget to make matching grants available to objective 5b bids in line with EU rules.

Mr. Sainsbury: No; there is no such rule.

Structural funds projects are funded jointly by the Community and the member state. My Department, and others, make public expenditure provision for the forecast value of the Community contributions. The remainder of the cost of each project is the responsibility of the beneficiary of the Community grant.

Electrical Engineers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to use the Institution of Electrical Engineers INSPEC database and information service.

Mr. Eggar: The DTI information and library services use those sources of information most appropriate to each individual inquiry they receive. The ILS has accessed the INSPEC databases regularly over the last 10 years or so, using a variety of hosts. In addition, the ILS subscribes to a number of IEE publications.

British Coal

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many employees of British Coal have been removed from their posts on the grounds of conflict of interest where they have been interested in participation in a management buy-out of their colliery; and if those in senior positions within British Coal are deemed to be affected by the same conflict of interest.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 June 1994]: This is a matter for British Coal, which has put in place detailed internal guidelines designed to avoid any potential conflicts of interest. These procedures require any manager wishing to participate in a management buy-out to obtain the consent of the chairman of the corporation to do so. I understand that in each case potential conflicts of interest are assessed and appropriate measures put in place.

Electricity Order

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990 to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 14 April 1994, c. 253]: I have today laid before Parliament an order further amending the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990.

This order, and the earlier order which I laid on 14 April, will bring into effect a package of five amendments to the exemption order that I announced at the end of last year. One effect of this order will be to allow more companies, including some joint ventures, to be included in a qualifying group of companies that may be supplied by an unlicensed on-site generator. In addition, more small generators may be exempt from the requirement for a generation licence, as a result of the change to the definition of a "qualifying group".

This package of amendments will reduce the regulatory burden on small generators, on-site generators and companies which sell on a small proportion of the electricity they purchase.

TREASURY

VAT on Fuel

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the revenue the Treasury will derive from the imposition of value added tax on domestic fuel in the financial years 1994-95 and 1995-96; how much of this will be attributable to the imposition of value added tax on the standing charge element of domestic fuel bills; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Latest published estimates of the revenue yield were set out in annex B to chapter 4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1994-95". Approximately 12 per cent. of the VAT yield is attributable to the standing charge element of domestic fuel bills.

Departmental Spending Reviews

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and which Departments have been asked to conduct a fundamental review of their spending; how many and which Departments have produced a report as a result of such a review; and how many and which Departments have (a) published and (b) plan to publish such a report.

Mr. Portillo: Four fundamental reviews were started in early 1993 covering social security, health, education and the Home Office. A further eight were announced in the November Budget last year. These covered employment and transport programmes, the legal Departments, Trade and Industry, Inland Revenue, Customs and Excise, Her Majesty's Treasury and urban expenditure. It is intended that all Departments will conduct such reviews by the end of this Parliament.

The reviews once started are on-going. There are no plans to publish reports on the reviews, but their output will, as the first four reviews did last year, inform the annual public expenditure survey decisions.

Government Deficit

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the central Government deficit in the last financial year as a percentage of gross domestic profit; and what is the maximum level allowed under the Maastricht convergence criterion.

Mr. Nelson: There is no maximum level for the budget deficit allowed under the excessive deficits procedure of the Maastricht treaty. Rather, there is a reference level of 3 per cent. of GDP which is one of the factors to be taken into account in deciding whether a country has an excessive deficit.

The measure of the budget deficit used for the excessive deficit procedure is the general Government financial deficit—GGFD. This is provisionally estimated at 7·8 per cent. of GDP in 1993-94. The projections in the 1994-95 medium term financial strategy showed the GGFD being reduced to 3 per cent. of GDP in 1996-97.

Income Statistics

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 April, Official Report, column 169, if he will make a statement on measures being taken to allow for changes in the family expenditure survey and in the classification of both income and taxation to improve time series statistics on the distribution of income, or specify upper and lower ranges of possible error, to overcome the problems of comparability.

Mr. Nelson: The family expenditure survey is modified over time to improve the quality and usefulness of the data and consequently changes are made which can have an effect on the continuity of published data. The aim of the Central Statistical Office article on the effects of taxes and benefits on household income is to give the best estimates for the current year. It is not possible to eliminate all inconsistencies.

Places of Worship (VAT Exemption)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rationale underlying the decision for places of religious worship to lose their VAT exemption from 1 April 1994.

Sir John Cope: The religious activities of churches remain outside the scope of the VAT system but they pay VAT on the things that they buy. The introduction of VAT on fuel and power from 1 April 1994 applies across the board to all consumers.

National Savings Adjudicator

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the salary of the national savings adjudicator; how many disputes he has settled during the last year; and if he will give a breakdown of the settlement.

Mr. Nelson: The national savings adjudicator is paid for the amount of work he is required to carry out, at a rate of £32 per hour plus associated travel expenses. In 1993-94, this totalled £5,450.

In the year to 31 March 1994 the adjudicator dealt with 10 disputes. A breakdown of the types of dispute is outlined:

Summary of hearings held in 1993-94

Executive Agencies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money previously attributed to civil service expenditure has not been accounted to that source of expenditure due to the establishment of executive agencies, in each year since the first executive agency was established; if he will publish a table breaking down the figures for each agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Expenditure by next steps agencies remains part of their sponsor Minister's programme.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money which was previously accounted to the civil service pay bill has not been attributed in each year since the establishment of the first executive agency; if he will publish a table breaking down these figures; what was the gross and net civil service pay bill in each relevant year; how much has been saved for accounting purposes by the civil service pay bill due to the establishment of executive agencies, expressed as a percentage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Spending by next steps agencies on civil service pay remains part of the total civil service paybill.

Public Expenditure

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the identifiable amount of public expenditure per head of population in Scotland; and by what amount, as a total sum for Scotland as a whole per annum, this differs from the average for England.

Mr. Portillo: Identifiable general Government expenditure per head in Scotland in 1992-93, the latest year for which information is available, was £3,968. The equivalent figure in England was £3,290. The total difference in public expenditure between the two countries, on this basis, was therefore some £3·5 billion.

Inward Investment

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the official estimate of the United States and Japanese direct investment in the United Kingdom as a percentage of direct investment in all European Community countries in each year from 1989 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 June 1994]: Fully comparable information on direct inward investment in the European Community from outside the EC is not available. However the following estimates for the years 1989 to 1992 have been prepared, based on the most readily available sources.

Value of stock of direct investment in United Kingdom as a percentage of that in all EC countries

1990	40·4	40·5

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

MI6 (Cleaners)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the estimated annual savings to be achieved from the replacement of regular cleaners at MI6 by contract cleaners.

Mr. Hurd: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear in his answer to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 21 June at columns 85-86; the contract for office cleaning services at the new Secret Intelligence Service headquarters at Vauxhall cross will achieve a substantial saving to public funds. It is not our policy to give detailed information about the expenditure of the individual security and intelligence agencies.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers & Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst & Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Goodlad: The table shows the relevant information for contracts let out to the named companies by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic and aid wings in 1992-93.

Similar information on contracts let to the named companies in the periods 1980-83, 1984-87 and 1988-91 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

No contracts were let by the FCO to Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton and Robson Rhodes in 1992-93.

Caribbean Sugar

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the United Kingdom Government are taking to ensure the continued support for Caribbean sugar in the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government remain firmly committed to the sugar protocol to the Lomé convention, which provides levy-free access to the European Union at guaranteed prices, negotiated annually, for 1·3 million tonnes of cane sugar from African, Caribbean and Pacific countries. Of the Caribbean countries, Barbados, Jamaica, Guyana and St. Kitts benefit from this protocol.

Nigeria

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently taken by diplomatic personnel in Nigeria positively to promote the interests of British industry in that country; and what plans he has to improve such representation in the immediate future.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has commercial officers in Lagos, Abuja, Kaduna, Kano and Port Harcourt—the latter two were opened in late 1993. They are there to seek out export opportunities, advise British companies on the business to be won in the market, lobby on their behalf for major contracts and against discrimination, and to organise inward and outward trade missions. A programme of promotional activity agreed by the tropical Africa advisory group, Department of Trade and Industry and the FCO is underway with a view to increasing our market share.

The level of commercial representation in Nigeria was reviewed and adjusted by a team of inspectors in February and March 1994. The staffing requirement will be kept under review.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the number of British citizens who are currently resident in Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are 7,000 British citizens registered with British diplomatic missions in Nigeria. In addition, the high commission in Lagos estimates that there are between 2,000 and 3,000 British citizens who are not registered. The total is therefore about 10,000.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement setting out Her Majesty's Government's policy on relations with Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We value our relations with Nigeria. We hope to see firm progress soon towards a restoration of democratic civilian rule.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the extent to which release from custody has now been granted for those human and civil rights activists arrested in Nigeria following the annulment of the June 1993 presidential election; and what response he has made to such releases.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Those arrested immediately after the annulment of the June 1993 election were released shortly afterwards. We welcomed these releases.

In the last few weeks however there have been fresh detentions, including Chief Abiola, presumed winner of the 1993 election. We strongly regret those arrests and call on the Nigerian Government to engage all sides in political dialogue.

Antarctic Protocol Secretariat

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to announce the siting of the Antarctic protocol secretariat.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Discussions continue among Antarctic treaty consultative parties about where the proposed Antarctic treaty secretariat should be sited. We hope that the secretariat will be in operation by the time that the environmental protocol to the antarctic treaty enters into force.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impartiality of the Nigerian forces in supporting the UNOMIL peacemaking mission in Liberia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no reason to doubt the commitment of Nigerian forces to help implement the peace process.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid Budget

34. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the United Kingdom's aid budget was (a) given as bilateral aid, (b) multilateral aid and (c) administered by the European Community in 1979, 1983, 1987, 1992 and currently.

Mr. Hurd: In 1979-80, 72 per cent. was bilateral aid, 12 per cent. was channelled through multilateral institutions other than the EC, and 16 per cent. was administered by the EC.

In 1983-84, the figures were 55 per cent., 15 per cent., 30 per cent.; in 1987-88 the figures were 60 per cent., 16 per cent., 24 per cent.; and in 1992-93, the most recent year for which figures are available, the figures were 54 per cent., 21 per cent., and 25 per cent. respectively.

Bosnia

35. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with his European counterparts to improve the delivery of humanitarian aid in Bosnia.

Mr. Hurd: My noble Friend the Baroness Chalker is in regular contact with her European counterparts to increase the effectiveness of aid to Bosnia.

Rwanda

36. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position on aid to Rwanda.

Mr. Hurd: Since 6 April 1994, Britain has committed over £11 million bilaterally of emergency aid for displaced Rwandans and Rwandan refugees in neighbouring countries. We continue to monitor the situation closely and plan a further assessment mission to the region next month.

Sub-Saharan Africa

37. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the overseas aid budget for sub-Saharan Africa goes to assist sustainable development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1992-93, 78 per cent. of total bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa was provided as development assistance.

Overseas Aid

38. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received this year in favour of the United Kingdom raising its contribution to overseas aid to 0·7 per cent. of GNP; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to receive representations from hon. Members and others. The Development Assistance Committee has just reported that United Kingdom aid in 1993 was above the average of OECD countries in terms of percentage of GNP.

Malawi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of Malawi about humanitarian needs caused by drought; and what response he has made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In April, the Government of Malawi appealed for help to offset a serious crop failure resulting from poor rains. We have pledged 10,000 tonnes of emergency food aid costing about £2·5 million. We have also pledged a further £3 million in balance of payments support for 1994-95 to help pay for additional imports of maize. This is in addition to our earlier pledge of £12 million of balance of payments aid to support Malawi's reform programmes.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the money in the United Nations Liberian trust fund has been spent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In addition to the United Kingdom contribution of $1 million, other contributions to date to the Liberian trust fund have been from the USA, $19·8 million and Denmark, $0·3 million.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 14 April, Official Report, column 259 for details of how the United Kingdom contribution is being spent. The other contributions have gone towards the costs of deploying equipping and maintaining the Ugandan and Tanzanian battalions as well as helping to maintain the rest of the ECOMOG force.

St. Kitts and Nevis

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the timetable for reviewing the framework for economic assistance to St. Kitts and Nevis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We expect to review the nature of our bilateral aid programme to St. Kitts and Nevis in early 1995. The programme will be fully committed until then, largely on assistance to infrastructure development.

HEALTH

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of (a) general dental practitioners in practice, (b) general dental practitioner practices, (c) community dental practitioners and (d) salaried dental practitioners, for each family health services authority area in England for each year since 1984; and if she will express these figures per 1,000 of the population resident in each family health services authority area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information will be placed in the Library. Information is not collected on general dental practices. As community dentists are employed by national health service trusts or district health authorities, information is not available by family health services authorities.

Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were in training for state registration in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

Pre-Registration in Training Population—England

Nutrition

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the numbers and percentages of the population, by age and income, with inadequate nutritional intakes for the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the form requested.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to issue a report updating the 1986-87 dietary and nutritional survey of British adults.

Mr. Sackville: The adult survey was part of a rolling programme of surveys on diet and nutrition covering all population groups. The adult survey will be repeated after 1998.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research has been commissioned by her Department on the adequacy of nutritional intake among children in the last five years;

(2) what assessment she has made of the recent trends in the nutritional adequacy of the diets of children, by household disposable income and socio-economic status.

Mr. Sackville: Twelve months' field work for a dietary and nutritional survey of children aged one and a half to four and a half years was completed in July 1993. Data from this survey are now being analysed. A report of the survey is expected to be published in the autumn. It will provide information on the links between nutritional adequacy and dietary patterns and a full range of socio-economic variables.

The survey was carried out as part of the joint Department of Health and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food national diet and nutrition survey—NDNS—programme which was set up to ascertain the dietary habits and nutritional status of all sections of the population in an eight-year cycle. Field work on a survey of schoolchildren aged five to 15 years is expected to begin in 1996.

In addition the Department of Health has, since 1975, commissioned five-yearly national surveys of infant feeding practice. The last survey was in 1990. Plans are now underway for the 1995 survey. The Department has also this year commissioned a survey of infant feeding practices in Asian ethnic subgroups of the population. The results of this survey are expected in 1997. Socio-economic data are collected in all surveys of infant feeding practice.

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the perinatal mortality rate in each of the past 10 years in each district health authority in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) West Yorkshire, (c) North Yorkshire and (d) Humberside.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Prostheses

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend the patients charter so that patients who by their general practitioner are to undergo hip or knee major joint surgery are informed of the type of prosthesis to be used.

Dr. Mawhinney: The patients charter already sets out the right for patients to be given a clear explanation of any treatment proposed, including any risks and alternatives, before the patient decides whether or not to agree to the treatment.

VAMP National Medicines Database

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made regarding the VAMP national medicines database; and what discussions have been held with (a) commercial and (b) academic research organisations in the United Kingdom and the United States of America regarding its future.

Mr. Sackville: Discussions with Reuters Ltd., the owners of the VAMP research databank are continuing. A seminar has been arranged for 11 July for interested researchers, academic departments, pharmaceutical companies and representatives of national health service organisations at which views will be canvassed on the best long-term management arrangements.

Infant Mortality, Yorkshire and Humberside

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of infant mortality in each of the past 10 years in each district health authority in (a) South Yorkshire, (b) West Yorkshire, (c) North Yorkshire and (d) Humberside.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what variation there is in the provision of infertility treatment between each regional authority in England; and what waiting lists are maintained.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities which (a) will purchase in-vitro fertilisation treatment for any couple of child-bearing age, (b) will purchase in-vitro fertilisation treatment for a restricted group of couples and (c) will not purchase in-vitro fertilisation treatment for any couple.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of each individual health authority to determine its provision of infertility treatment. Information on which health authorities provide in-vitro fertilisation treatment is not available centrally. Available information on waiting times for infertility treatment is given in "Hospital Episode Statistics, Volume 2", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives she proposes to reduce waiting lists for infertility treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are committed to reducing all waiting times, including that for infertility treatment. Patients charter guarantees limit the time people have to wait for hospital treatment. District health authorities are encouraged to improve upon these guarantees.

Ambulances

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulances there are per head of population in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) England and (e) the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is for individual ambulance services to determine the number of ambulances which meet the requirements. Total numbers of vehicles in England and Wales are not available centrally.

I understand that Scotland has 92 accident and emergency ambulances per million population and that Northern Ireland has 80 accident and emergency ambulances per million population.

Walsgrave Hospital, Coventry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints she has received in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 from patients and organisations representing patients at Walsgrave hospital, Coventry; and what assessment she has made of the working of the patients charter there.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received a number of letters about the Walsgrave hospitals national health service trust in Coventry. These have been referred to Mr. David Loughton, chief executive of the trust. Meeting the requirements of the patients charter is the responsibility of the trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Robert Jordan, chairman of the Walsgrave hospitals NHS trust, for details.

Hospital Trusts (Complaints)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to reduce the number of complaints received by hospital trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts should be seeking constantly to raise the standards of care provided to meet the aspirations of health care purchasers and individual patients. They should give patients every opportunity to make comments and suggestions or put forward complaints on their services. Patients' complaints can and should be used for enhancing the quality of the health services provided.

Patients Charter, West Midlands

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement as to how the patients charter is working in (a) hospitals in the west midlands and (b) the health service in the west midlands;

(2) what benefit to patients the patients charter has given in the west midlands.

Dr. Mawhinney: The patients charter has brought benefits to national health service patients in all areas, including the west midlands, by informing patients of their rights and the standards of service they can expect to receive. It is an important step forward in ensuring the delivery of quality services to patients.

Vaccination Targets

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incentive payments general practitioners receive under their contracts for meeting vaccination programme targets; how the payments are related to the number of vaccines administered; and what limit exists on the number of vaccinations for which payments are made.

Dr. Mawhinney: Two incentive payments are available to general practitioners for meeting immunisation targets. The first is for achieving either higher or lower targets for immunising children aged two against diphtheria, tetanus, polio, whooping cough, measles, mumps, rubella, and, from 1 July this year, Hib meningitis. The second is for booster immunisations in children aged five against diphtheria, tetanus and polio. Details of the payment mechanisms are contained in the "Statement of Fees and Allowances", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of out-of-court settlements for medical negligence claims involving national health service bodies in each year since 1990-91.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to her answer of 10 May, Official Report, columns 484-86, if she will itemise which national health service bodies have been involved in medical negligence claims, and for what amount;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 537-38, if she will itemise which national health service bodies have been involved in medical negligence claims; and for what amount.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information supplied to the Department by national health service bodies is provided voluntarily in confidence on the basis that it will be collated to show regional and national trends.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish an updated list of the chairmen and non-executive members of regional health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 25 April at column 68. Mr. P. Wright has since filled the vacancy on the board of the North West regional health authority.

Remuneration

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of remuneration paid to chairmen and members of (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) national health service trusts and (d) family health service authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 5 May 1993 at column 91.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will show for each NHS trust into which band the trust falls for the purpose of evaluating the chairman and non-executive members' salaries.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of each trust to pay its chairman in line with the appropriate band for that trust, which is based on the unit's turnover in 1988-89. Information on the band applicable to individual trusts is not available centrally. The annual rate of remuneration for all non-executive directors of national health service trusts is currently £5,000.

NHS (Private Accommodation)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private pay (a) bed units and (b) wings there were within the national health service in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: These are local matters about which the Department does not collect information.

Medical Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to penalise medical consultants for inadequate performance.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for employing authorities.

Surgical Interventions (Quality)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of all surgical interventions are provided by unsupervised junior hospital doctors; what evidence she has as to whether the quality of this care is good; and what evidence she has as to monitoring of these practices and the provision of quality control by non-clinical managers.

Mr. Sackville: Detailed operational issues are the responsibility of health authorities and national health service trusts. Information on which staff undertake surgical interventions is not available centrally.

Hospital consultants are responsible for ensuring that junior doctors do not undertake any surgical intervention which is beyond their competence and for providing adequate supervision. The report of the 1991-92 national confidential enquiry into perioperative deaths—NCEPOD—published in 1993, commented that in some specialties, basic specialist trainees should not be left to work alone without suitable supervision and direction. NCEPOD has recommended that consultants and hospital managers at local level should work together to achieve this. Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Health authorities are now responsible for funding clinical audit through contracts, and non-clinical managers are therefore involved in deciding the agenda of topics for clinical audit.

NHS Chief Executives

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what deficiencies she has identified in career training for chief executives in the NHS; and what plans she has to remedy them.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is a wide range of training and development programmes for chief executives and other senior managers in the national health service, much of it carried out at local level to meet the specific requirements of individual managers and the changing needs of the service. The national health service executive works with managers of professional and educational bodies to ensure that chief executives are able to meet the demanding standards expected of them.

Acute Beds

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by London health district, the total number of acute beds for each of the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information will be placed in the Library. Figures for some district health authorities may not be comparable over the period because of boundary changes.

During the period 1988-89 to 1992-93 there was a 4-49 per cent. increase in the number of in-patients treated.

Local Pay Agreements

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects all trusts to be operating local pay agreements.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 provided for all trusts to employ staff on such terms as they think fit. The chief executive of the NHS executive wrote on 6 June to the chief executives of all trusts asking for local action plans to be established by October 1994 for local pay machinery to be in place by February 1995.

Matrons

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to re-introduce the post of matron into all NHS hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The exact titles and responsibilities of senior nurses are for local decision. The title matron may be used if appropriate. Every national health service trust is required to have a senior nurse as an executive director.

General Practice Manpower

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the trend in entry into general practice in the last three years; and what assessment she has made as to the adequacy of entry to compensate for loss.

Dr. Mawhinney: Over the past three years there have been approximately 1,400 new entrants to general practice per year in England and Wales. This has been sufficient to ensure a continuing increase in overall numbers of general practitioners.

Distinction Awards (Consultants)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the report on consultants' distinction awards will be published.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are considering the report of the working party on the review of the consultants' distinction awards scheme, and an announcement will be made in due course.

Lynfield Mount Hospital

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will appoint an independent inquiry into how a patient admitted to the secure unit located at Lynfield Mount hospital in Bradford escaped from the hospital grounds on 21 June; what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the security arrangements at the secure unit and in the hospital; and what her policy is in respect of the location of secure units in residential areas.

Mr. Bowis: Bradford community health national health service trust has instigated a full investigation into this matter.

Hospitals are responsible for ensuring that security of pyschiatric patients is maintained at a level consistent with the risk that they may present to themselves or to other people. The siting of national health service facilities has, since April 1991, been subject to the normal requirements of town and country planning legislation.

Practice Nurses

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what scientific evidence she has as to the cost-effectiveness of the increase in practice nurses in primary care.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are satisfied that the effect of the increase in practice nurses is evident in benefits to patients, for example, through support of general practitioners in the provision of the following services;

immunisation—over 90 per cent. of GPs have achieved top rates;

97 per cent. of GPs have reached cervical cytology targets;

over 90 per cent. of GPs have reached band three of health promotion, while almost 90 per cent. of GPs have been approved to run chronic disease management programmes for the treatment of asthma and diabetes;

a survey conducted by MORI in 1991 found that almost four out of five elderly patients, over 75 years of age, who were offered a health check took advantage of it while nine out of ten of those patients who had the health check found it to be useful.

Dental Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women were eligible for free dental service during pregnancy and one year after the birth of the child in each of the past three financial years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been deregistered by their dentists in each regional health authority since 1 July 1992; and how many dentists in each of the RHA areas have been involved in deregistrations.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 June 1994]: The information is shown in the tables. Over a similar period total patient registrations rose by 1,049,178 or 3·8 per cent.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Obscene Publications Branch

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contingency plans he has formulated for co-ordination and liaison between Governments and international agencies responsible for supervising broadcasting standards and broadcasting regulation compliance with specific reference to sexually violent and explicit material should the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis proceed with his plans to disband the obscene publications branch of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that no proposals about the future of the branch have been made, but the Metropolitan police have given assurances that the work of the branch, as it relates to broadcast material, will continue.

Audio-description Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has made to broadcasting authorities concerning the availability of audio-description services on television for blind and partially sighted people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: None. But I know that a consortium of the Independent Television Commission, the BBC, the ITV Association, the Royal National Institute for the Blind, together with a range of industrial and academic partners, are developing the Audetel project. This project aims to provide an audio-description commentary on television to help those who are blind or partially sighted to understand the programme. I understand that the BBC and ITV hope to begin experimental transmissions in July.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what research has been undertaken by his Department into the use of audio-described television for blind and/or partially sighted people in the United States; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Audio-description services for television were introduced in the United States in 1990. It is for the partners in the Audetel project to consider how far American experience is helpful in developing audio-descriptive services in the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given by his Department in conjunction with the Department of the Environment to local authorities regarding crime prevention through planning and design.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In February the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office in consultation with the Home Office issued a circular on "Planning Out Crime" which gave detailed guidance to local authorities and others about planning considerations relating to crime prevention. Specialist advice on designing out crime is also provided to local authorities and others by police architectural liaison officers.

Birds of Prey (Thefts)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been for stealing (a) captive and (b) wild birds of prey in each year since 1990 and each month during 1994.

Mr. Maclean: The number of offenders convicted under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 from 1990 to 1992 for offences related to birds are given in the table. Information is not collected centrally as to the species involved.

Police (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police functions he intends shall be subject to measurement in order to provide a basis for performance-related pay for chief constables and other senior officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This matter is under discussion with the relevant interests.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the possible incentives he is considering as the rewards in a system of performance-related pay for chief constables and other senior police officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 20 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge, (Mr. Shersby), Official Report, column 9.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will restore the practice of publishing quarterly detailed figures for recorded crime in England and Wales and in each police force area as soon as such figures can be compiled by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to revert to quarterly publication of recorded crime statistics.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what sources of information he relies for an assessment of intensity or persistence of law-breaking with regard to the age and sex of offenders compared with the generality of the population; and if he will publish such of it as is not already published.

Mr. Maclean: The main source of official statistics on criminal careers is the offenders index, a database containing information on all serious convictions in England and Wales from 1963 to 1992. Studies carried out using the offenders index include cohort studies which enable estimates to be made of the percentage of the population with serious convictions at different ages and by sex. Periodically, the offenders index is supplemented with information on cautioning collected from police forces. Information on the offenders index and studies carried out using it is contained in "The Offenders Tale: Janus Studies", a copy of which is available in the Library. The results of cohort and other analyses based upon the offenders index are published regularly and will continue to be so.

A detailed analysis carried out by the Home Office research and planning unit of criminal careers, including involvement in offending, frequency of offending and factors associated with persistance and desistance analysis, was published last year.

"Analysing Offending: data, models and interpretations", by Roger Tarling, published by HMSO.

Air Rifles

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to introduce measures to control the purchase of air rifles by mail order;

(2) if he will make it his policy to introduce greater controls over the purchase and possession of air rifles by young people.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. There are already extensive restrictions on the purchase, possession and use of such weapons, particularly in relation to young people. In its second annual report, the Firearms Consultative Committee, the independent statutory body established to advise Government on the firearms legislation, concluded that the law as it stands is adequate to deal with current levels of misuse. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce further controls.

Immigration Act 1971

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals under the age of 18 years who are (a) asylum seekers and (b) others are currently detained under the powers of the Immigration Act 1971, as amended; and what is the age of each such person.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 23 June, there were 10 people detained under Immigration Act powers who were, or claimed to be, under the age of 18. A breakdown by age is in the table:

	Numbers
Asylum Seekers
15 years	[1]1
16 years	0
17 years	8
Others
17 years	1

[1] The detainee who claims to be 15 years old has been medically examined and is believed to be several years older.

Fire Safety

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to effect changes in the fire precautions and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans at present to make changes in the fire precautions and safety regulations. However, there are proposals for changes in the report of the interdepartmental scrutiny of fire safety legislation and enforcement which was published on 22 June. A copy of that report has been placed in the Library of the House. The Government are committed to full consultation on the report's recommendations before considering whether changes should be made to the current legislative regime.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received concerning the effects on New Commonwealth children learning English of reductions in section 11 funding; and how many such representations were (a) favourable and (b) unfavourable;

(2) what changes he proposes to make to section 11 funding; and over what time scale.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received many representations from local authorities and associations, teacher unions, ethnic minority communities and other interested parties about reductions in section 11 funding which, it was announced in November 1992, would need to take effect in 1994-95 and 1995-96. Such representations have essentially been to express concern about implications of reductions for the education system. However, there has been widespread support among relevant organisations for the approach, which we have announced we are adopting from 1994-95, of paying grant in the form of an annual budget to each grant recipient, rather than as a fixed percentage of actual salary costs, in order to ensure maximum flexibility for grant recipients in using the substantial funding which remains available.

In the future, funding to meet particular needs of ethnic minorities will be available from the section 11 programme, or through wider regeneration programmes under the single regeneration budget.

Motor-propelled Boats

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has to protect tourists using the foreshores and beaches of Wales from nuisance caused by the use of motor-propelled boats; and if he will bring forward legislation to limit the use of such boats.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Secretary of State has no powers to control the use of power boats on the foreshores and beaches. Local authorities are able to make byelaws to control public bathing and to regulate the navigation of seaside pleasure boats to prevent danger to bathers, but this does not include a power to prohibit the use of particular types of craft. There are no immediate plans to introduce legislation to increase local authorities' powers in this area, but problems of competing demands on coastal areas were the subject of recent discussion papers published jointly by the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office. Responses to these papers are currently under consideration.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry or residence as persons of independent means were refused in the past 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on persons of independent means refused entry clearance, or admission, to the United Kingdom is not available. Twenty such persons were refused an extension of stay, and five were refused settlement, in 1993.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were made over the past 12 months for persons to come to the United Kingdom or continue residence in the United Kingdom as persons of independent means on the basis of assets in excess of £500,000.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on persons of independent means applying for entry clearance, or admitted, to the United Kingdom is not available. One hundred and twenty such persons were granted an extension of stay, and 140 were granted settlement, in 1993. Such persons had assets of not less than £200,000, or income of not less than £20,000 a year. Separate information on persons with assets in excess of £500,000 is not available.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a breakdown of the number of asylum seekers held in detention of 13 June by (a) nationality, (b) gender, (c) length of detention, (d) place of detention and (e) immigration status at the time of application.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information available relates to people detained under Immigration Act powers on 22 June, who had applied for asylum at some stage. It is set out in the table:

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers and other immigration detainees were being held in police stations during each of the past three months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 22 June, 10 people who had at some stage claimed asylum were detained in police cells under Immigration Act powers. Historical information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were fully trained in the use of firearms in (a) 1983 and (b) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 13,020 authorised firearms officers in England and Wales on 31 December 1983, and 6,769 on 31 December 1993. The drop in numbers reflects decisions by chief officers of police to concentrate their firearms capacity in a smaller number of highly trained officers.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers sustained firearm injuries in the course of their duty in (a) 1983 and (b) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1985, the earliest year for which figures are readily available, 16 police officers were injured by firearms in the course of their duty in England and Wales, none fatally.

In 1992, 11 police officers were injured, one, a special constable, receiving fatal injuries.

Information for 1993 is not yet available.

Prison Births

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) of 10 May, Official Report, column 73, regarding babies born in prison, what were the circumstances in which one baby was born in prison in the year 1987-88 and two babies in 1988-89; at what prison the mothers were being detained; and if he will make a statement in respect of his Department's instructions about mothers giving birth in prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Philippa Drew to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the circumstances in which one baby was born in prison in the year 1987-88 and two babies in 1988-89; at what prison the mothers were being detained; and if he will make a statement in respect of his Department's instructions about mothers giving birth in prisons.

The establishments where the mothers were being detained at the time of birth were:

1987-88: HMP Styal
1988-89: HMP Holloway
1988-89: HM Remand Centre Risley

In each case the babies were born in prison establishments because the progress of labour was too fast to allow the mother to be taken to hospital in time. It is the usual practice for mothers to be delivered at a designated local hospital. On the rare occasions that the birth takes place in a prison establishment, the birth certificate does not show that the birth took place in prison. It instead indicates the area in which the establishment is located.

Police Officers (Abuse of Authority)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were charged with abuse of their authority in (a) 1983 and (b) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Figures are not collected centrally on the categories of disciplinary charges leading to disciplinary proceedings.

Substantiated complaints from members of the public of oppressive behaviour by police officers numbered 207 in 1993: assault—94; oppressive conduct or harassment—41; unlawful or unnecessary arrest or detention—72. Equivalent figures are not available for 1983.

Firearms

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of firearms circulating illegally in Britain; and what assessment he has made of whether the number is increasing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have made no such estimate. The Government take the illegal possession of firearms very seriously, but I am aware of no hard evidence which would indicate that it is increasing.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have had their firearms certificate withdrawn for misuse in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available centrally.

Police Injuries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many work days were lost by police officers who sustained injuries in the course of their duty in (a) 1983 and (b) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of injuries is not held centrally. In 1990, the earliest year for which complete figures are readily available, a total of 53,626 days' sick absence resulted from assaults on police officers in England and Wales. In 1992 the equivalent figure was 47,023. Information for 1993 is not yet available.

Life Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were serving a life sentence and were released from prison after serving less than 10, 15 or 20 years, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is shown in the table.

Year of release	Time served under sentence[1] Less than 10 years	10 less than 15 years	15 less than 20 years

[2] Figures for 1993 are provisional.

Fire Service

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the future role of the fire service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans at present to change the role of the fire service as laid down in the Fire Services Act 1947, as amended.

The role of the fire service and other bodies responsible for enforcing fire safety legislation is currently being considered in the light of the report of the interdepartmental scrutiny of fire safety legislation which was published on 22 June. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House. The Government are committed to full consultation on the report's recommendations before considering whether changes should be made to current legislative and enforcement regimes.

TRANSPORT

Roadworthiness Checks

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) of 21 March, Official Report, columns 105-7, how many spot checks on the roadworthiness of vehicles were carried out in the year 1993-94; what was the number of traffic enforcement spot checks carried out in the same year; and how many spot checks are planned by the Vehicle Inspectorate for the current financial year.

Mr. Key: The following is the information:

Roadworthiness Inspections

	1993-94
PSV spot checks	[1]24,521
HGV spot checks	[2]120,335
LGV spot checks	[3]20,035

[2] Excludes 3,342 special checks on lighting and 10,589 on emissions.
[3] Excludes 33,103 special emission checks on cars and light goods vehicles.

Note:

In 1993-94 the Inspectorate was not asked by Departmental customers to conduct full roadworthiness spot checks on cars.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the result of the cost benefit analysis calculations for (a) the Swainswick and Batheaston bypass on its own and (b) the Swainswick and Batheaston bypass together with the road schemes connected to its northern and its eastern end;

(2) if he will list the financial years in which funds have been allocated for the road schemes connecting with (a) the northern end and (b) the eastern end of the Swainswick and Batheaston bypass.

Mr. Key: These questions are operational matters for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, will be writing to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 27 June 1994:

I am writing in response to your two recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Transport about trunk road schemes near Bath. These are matters for which the Highways Agency is now responsible.

The results of the cost benefit analyses for these schemes are as follows:

(a) A4/A46 Batheaston/Swainswick bypass

Net present value (low growth)	£3·2 million
Net present value (high growth)	£17·7 million
Benefit:Cost ratio	1·32:1

(b) A46 Upper Swainswick—M4 Tormarton improvements

Net present value (low growth)	£13·1 million
Net present value (high growth	£42·2 million
Benefit:Cost ratio	2·78:1

(c) A36 Beckington—East of Bath improvement

Net present value (low growth)	£4·3 million
Net present value (high growth)	£42·2 million
Benefit:Cost ratio	1·60:1

The results are dependent on future economic growth and figures are given separately for low and high growth, which are equally likely scenarios. The benefit to cost ratio is an average which is a useful indicator of returns from investments.

Calculations have not been carried out for all the schemes together. There could be additional benefits with the completion of all three schemes, but each is justified in its own right in any event.

We are at a comparatively early stage in the development of the A46 Upper Swainswick—M4 Tormarton Improvements and the A36 Beckington—East of Bath Improvement. They are still subject to the successful completion of statutory procedures. Apart from the costs of preparation, funds have not been allocated at this stage. The claims of these schemes on our limited rsources will be assessed against other competing demands at the relevant time.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what formula officials within his Department adopt to determine whether a scheme qualifies for transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Key: No set formula is adopted. Criteria for eligibility for transport supplementary grant—TSG—are set out annually in a local authority circular on transport policies and programmes—TPP—submissions. The most recent circular, for 1995-97, is local authority circular 2/94, published on 25 May 1994. My right hon. Friend and I consider bids for TSG on their merits against the criteria and competing bids, within the resources available.

Newly Qualified Drivers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many traffic accidents involving newly qualified drivers were reported in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Information about the number of traffic accidents involving newly qualified drivers is not available. However, a high proportion of newly qualified drivers who have recently passed their test are under 22 years of age. The following table shows the number of accident involved car drivers who were under 22 years of age, since 1990.

Number of car drivers (under 22 years of age) involved in injury road accidents Great Britain 1990-93

	Drivers
1990	56,561
1991	51,017
1992	48,687
1993	43,823

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the terms of reference and scope of the feasibility study being undertaken into the upgrading of the west coast main line by Railtrack and West Coast Main Line Development Company Ltd.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack and WCML Development Co. Ltd. have published a summary of the terms of reference and scope of the study in a document entitled "The West Coast Main Line, Progress on the Feasibility Study". I have placed copies in the Library.

Disabled People (Road-crossing Facilities)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by local authorities with provision of road-crossing facilities for (a) the visually disabled and (b) other disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department of Transport has worked closely with local authorities since 1986 to give guidance on the use of dropped kerbs at road crossings to help wheelchair users in conjunction with tactile surfaces to provide guidance and warning to visually impaired pedestrians. The Department's guidance in this area is very widely followed by local authorities all over the country.

In addition to tactile surfaces, audible signals at ordinary pelican crossings have been in use for some 25 years. More recently, the "Bleep and Sweep" audible unit has been developed by the Department for use at staggered pelican crossings. This provides a directional sound which overcomes the danger of confusion to visually impaired pedestrians. A tactile cone has also been introduced which provides guidance to pedestrians who are both deaf and blind. Most recently, puffin crossings have been introduced on a trial basis by the Department. These have the major advantage for elderly and disabled pedestrians that the amount of crossing time can be extended to accommodate the needs of those who move more slowly.

Local authorities are being encouraged to include these facilities in both new designs and modifications.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to visit Paisley Gilmour Street railway station to evaluate its accessibility to disabled and infirm people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 22 June at column 245.

Road Accidents

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities occurred in accidents involving (a) light goods vehicles and (b) cars over the last five years.

Mr. Key: The information requested is shown in the table.

Fatalities in accidents involving LGVs and cars: GB 1988 to 1993

Casualties

Year	Accidents involving an LGV	Accidents involving a car
1988	563	3,967
1989	588	4,300
1990	550	4,183
1991	501	3,704
1992	415	3,466
1993	370	3,069

EDUCATION

Bullying

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will produce a children's charter advising children on their rights generally and on the matter of bullying in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to produce such a charter. The Department has, however, already published a leaflet of guidance for children setting out what they should do if they are bullied.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what decisions his Department has taken in respect of TECs in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's other involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. Boswell: The Employment Department takes the lead on the majority of decisions concerning TECs. This Department has been strengthening its relationships with TECs, for example, through a series of regional seminars this year hosted by DFE Ministers and senior officials at which issues of mutual concern and interest have been discussed.

Student Loans

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many former students with student loans are not currently making repayments as their earned income has failed to reach 85 per cent. of average incomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children of New Commonwealth origin he estimates will be taught English with resources obtained from the single regeneration budget; and what total amount of section 11 funding is being transferred into the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information is not readily available for the current year in the form requested in the first part of the question. The bidding round for the single regeneration budget for 1995-96 does not close until September this year. It will be up to local bidding partnerships to decide what priority to give to the needs of ethnic minority children and to bid accordingly. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has transferred, for incorporation into the single regeneration budget, the following financial year amounts from his Department's section 11 provision:

	£ million
1994-95	60·5
1995-96	53·0
1996-97	53·0

WALES

Heart Disease

13. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level of coronary heart disease in Wales; and what was the figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1992, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 9,198 deaths in Wales from coronary heart disease representing 3·2 deaths per 1,000 population. In 1983, the figure was 9,880, representing 3·5 deaths per 1,000 population.

Development Board for Rural Wales

15. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations he has had on the future of the Development Board for Rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I have consulted widely on the review and we are carefully considering the responses received. My right hon. Friend will announce his conclusions before the summer recess.

District Nurses

16. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of unremunerated hours worked by district nurses in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Local Government

17. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on decentralisation schemes for local government in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the debates in the House at Report stage of the Local Government (Wales) Bill on 15 and 16 June. I will issue guidance under clause 27 of the Bill in due course.

Welsh Language Act

18. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the implementation of the Welsh Language Act 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Good progress is being made. Most importantly, the Welsh Language Board is preparing statutory guidelines for Welsh language schemes about which it will consult later this year and which my right hon. Friend will put before the House thereafter.

Port Talbot Hospital

19. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of Port Talbot hospital.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: West Glamorgan health authority is proposing to close this hospital and to move on to improved arrangements for health care, including a new modern hospital at Baglan.

Housing (Disabled People)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh housing stock is constructed or adapted to meet the needs of physically disabled people at the latest date for which information is available; if he will break this information down into categories of housing tenure; what plans he has to enhance the availability of such housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the 1994 housing strategies and operational plans round, local authorities reported 2,678 local authority and 1,511 registered housing association properties as meeting the particular requirements of disabled people. These figures represent 1·27 per cent. of total local authority stock—as at 1 April 1994—and 3·62 per cent. of total registered housing association stock—as at 31 May 1994—respectively. Figures are not available for the private sector. Disabled facilities grants, local authority expenditure on aids and adaptations and the special needs policy of Housing for Wales are the main vehicles for ensuring an adequate supply of adapted housing.

Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total funding unaccounted for, or misused by, non-departmental public bodies in Wales during the year 1993-94; if he intends refunding such money to local authorities or relevant bodies which have suffered difficulties because of this mismanagement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The accounts for non-departmental public bodies for 1993-94 are currently being audited and will be laid before Parliament in due course.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: Information is available only from 1988-89. Over this period the Welsh Office has awarded contracts to five of the firms mentioned for consultancy work, including market testing. Information on the number of contracts awarded is as follows:

	1988-89 to 1991-92		1992-93
	Market testing	Consultancy	Market testing	Consultancy
Coopers and Lybrand	1	9	1	5
KPMG Peat-Marwick	—	5	—	5
Ernst and Young	—	1	—	—
Price Waterhouse	—	3	1	—
Touche Ross	—	13	1	5

Details of expenditure with individual firms cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Medical Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what statutory basis he withheld the names of those medical consultants in Wales who currently hold merit awards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The names of individual award holders have always been regarded as confidential on the ground that the earnings of individual members of staff are a matter between the employee and his or her employer. Publication of the names of award holders might also lead individual patients to judge the quality of the treatment afforded on the basis of the level of award held.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to remove the confidential nature relating to the names of those medical consultants in Wales who currently hold merit awards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The working party to review the consultant's distinction awards scheme set up by the Minister for Health in November 1993 was asked to consider as part of its deliberations whether the names of award holders should in future be published. The report of the working party is currently being considered, and an announcement will be made in due course.

Infertility, Gwent

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what provision is made for infertility investigation in Gwent;

(2) what is the provision for infertility treatment in Gwent.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision for infertility investigation and treatment is a matter for Gwent health authority which will take into account need, competing demands and available resources.

Exports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of Britain's manufacturing industry exports originated in Wales in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Export statistics are collected on a United Kingdom basis by HM Customs and Excise at the point at which goods leave the country. It is not currently possible to routinely separate out figures for exports which originate from Wales.

Hospital Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales where is the highest recorded increase in the published extra-contractual raferrals tarrif between the tariff in 1993-94 and the tariff in 1994-95 and in the specialties of (a) ENT, (b) general surgery, (c) ophthalmology, (d) orthopaedics and (e) general medicine.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The highest average increase for general surgery is at Wrexham Maelor hospital NHS trust; for general medicine it is at Llandough hospital NHS trust and for ENT, ophthalmology and orthopaedics it is at Carmarthen and District NHS trust.

These increases need to be interpreted with care as hospitals are refining both the classification of services and the way costs are allocated to them.

Boat Accidents

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many accidents involving motor-propelled craft and speed boats were reported off the coast of Wales during each year since 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Commercial Property

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the commercial property market in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: During the past 18 months, my Department has received about a dozen representations, on four main areas—rent reviews, confidentiality clauses in leases, dispute procedures and unfair leases.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the estimated income of the national insurance fund for 1993-94, in total, from each class of contribution, from the Treasury and from other sources; and what was the estimated expenditure of the fund for each benefit, administration and other outgoings.

Mr. Hague: The figures shown in the table are both provisional and estimated. The actual figures for 1993-94 will not be known until the autumn as full details of income and expenditure will not be available until then. The figures will also be subject to scrutiny by National Audit Office.

Other Outgoings	354
Total Expenditure	40,217
Excess of income over outgo	1,287
Opening Balance 1 April 1993	3,436
Estimated Balance in Fund at the end of year	4,723

Note: The above figures are comprised of estimates from the Government Actuary Department for contribution income, the latest departmental view, based on the June in-year monitoring report of benefit expenditure and actual figures from the Department's accounting system. National Audit Office has yet to audit the figures which will be in the draft annual account and due to be presented to the Department's accounting officer in October 1994.

Income Support

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the annual income entitlement, supplementary benefit or income support, excluding housing benefit for (a) a single unemployed person aged 24 years and (b) a man and a woman both aged 34 years with two children aged 12 and 11 years, for each year since 1979, at April 1994 prices on the Rossi index.

Mr. Burt: The figures requested are in the attached table.

Part of our policy in replacing supplementary benefit was to target benefit on those groups most in need, and we succeeded. Since 1988 we have given extra help, over and above normal upratings, to families with children. The income support rates for single people aged 18 to 24 take account of the fact that the vast majority live as members of someone else's household.

A Financial year	B Single unemployed 24 year old	C 34 year old couple with children aged 11 and 12
1979-80	1,974·53	4,868·14
1980-81	2,012·82	5,124·23
1981-82	2,064·88	5,467·05
1982-83	2,118·34	5,606·61
1983-84	2,182·33	5,773·89
1984-85	2,185·28	5,782·62
1985-86	2,188·14	5,790·91
1986-87	2,208·75	5,852·50
1987-88	2,185·95	5,792·06
1988-89	1,790·41	6,171·93
1989-90	1,785·39	6,255·39
1990-91	1,750·05	6,164·66
1991-92	1,764·48	6,205·64
1992-93	1,829·63	6,463·59
1993-94	1,838·64	6,495·98

Notes:

Column B – shows for 1979 to 1988 the annual supplementary benefit entitlement, at 1994 prices, for a single householder. From April 1988 the figures are the annual entitlement to income support, at 1994 prices, for a single unemployed person aged 18-24. No additions which might have been payable within supplementary benefit or income support premiums for special needs have been included.

Column C – shows for 1979-88 the annual supplementary benefit entitlement, at 1994 prices, for a couple (aged 18 or over) with two children aged 11 and 12. From April 1988 the figures are the annual income support entitlement, at 1994 prices, for the same family composition. No additions which might have been payable within supplementary benefit have been included. The income support figures included the family premium which is paid automatically.

The Rossi index (ie the retail prices index less housing costs) has been used to revalue at 1994 prices because there is no housing element in the entitlement shown.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were claiming income support in Scotland, Wales and for each of the standard English regions for the most recent date for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the total number of partners and dependants of those income support recipients in each area.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

	Number of claimants 000s	Number of partners 000s	Number of dependents 000s
North East	839	153	464
North West	812	127	455
Midlands	912	178	530

Contributions Agency

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the present policy of the Contributions Agency towards the allocation of national insurance numbers to people seeking work.

Mr. Hague: The Department's long-standing policy has been to allocate national insurance numbers, in accordance with regulation 44 of the Contributions Regulations 1979, to applicants who may be liable to pay NI contributions. This includes the employed, the self-employed, those who wish to pay voluntary contributions and those approaching the age of 16. The Department also uses the NI number as an administrative identifier within the social security benefit system and allocate NI numbers to people who claim certain benefits and who do not already have a number.

The Department has recently been reviewing the policy and procedures for allocating NI numbers to those who are seeking work. As a result, the Contributions Agency will shortly be issuing new guidance to its local offices. This will specify that they can accept applications from people who can demonstrate satisfactorily that they are seeking employment. If, however, the applicant cannot demonstrate satisfactorily why he needs a NI number, the Department may consider refusing the application. The Department's refusal to allocate a number in such cases does not prevent the applicant re-applying when it is appropriate to do so. Nor does it prevent anyone taking up employment before he receives a NI number.

Living Standards (Children)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research he has commissioned or undertaken in the past five years in specific relation to article 27(1) of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child on an adequate standard of living.

Mr. Burt: No research has been undertaken specifically as a result of article 27(1) of the convention. However, research is regularly conducted into the role of social security and its impact on those in low income households. A list of research projects sponsored by the Department is published in the "Social Security Research Yearbooks" —formally the "DHSS Handbook of Research and Development"—copies of which are in the Library.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received on the rate of deduction from income-related benefits for capital held by the claimant; and what response he has made.

Mr. Burt: The Department has received correspondence on this issue from a variety of sources. We have no current plans to change the formula applied for taking account of capital in excess of £3,000 when calculating entitlement to income-related benefits.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been made on behalf of vaccine-damaged children for the vaccine-damaged payment, who have been accepted as vaccine damaged but were turned down because their disability was less than 80 per cent.; and how many parents have applied but have been turned down because of the six year ruling.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the vaccine damage payment scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Richard Burden, dated 24 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Vaccine Damage Scheme.

The information is not available in the exact format requested. I have been able to provide information from the first date from which figures are available, June 1981.

Since June 1981 there have been 853 claims made on behalf vaccine damaged children for the vaccine damaged payment. Of these, 8 have been accepted as vaccine damaged but were turned down because their disability was less than 80 per cent.

I am not able to provide you with details of the number of parents who have applied but been turned down because of the six year rule. This is because records held do not classify "parents" separately. However, I can tell you that since June 1981, with regard to all claims, the number of claims disallowed because of the six year rule is 209.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of vaccine damage payments and the financial cost of compensation paid out to victims and their families for each year since 1987.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table[1].

Year	£
1987	150,000
1988	80,000
1989	70,000
1990	10,000
1991	50,000
1992	360,000
1993	60,000

Financial compensation is payable only when there has been a delay in dealing with the claim. Since 1987, approximately £25,000 has been paid in this way.

Note: [1] Figures are subject to amendment as further awards may be made on review or appeal.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many vaccine damage cases seeking compensation have been rejected and how many approved, breaking down the figures by category of damage for which the payments were made, in each year since 1987.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table[1].

Years	Awards	Disallowances
1988	5	38
1989	2	53
1990	Nil	40
1991	2	41
1992	[2]16	36
1993	3	46

[1] Figures are subject to amendment as further awards may be made on review or appeal.

[2] The increase in awards for 1992 was due to a combination of factors and includes a number of awards for claims made in earlier years, some consequent upon Vaccine Damage Tribunal findings.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of the vaccine damage scheme for each year since 1987.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. The administrative costs of the vaccine damage payment unit are subsumed within those of a larger administrative unit at Fylde, Blackpool.

Benefits

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the live load in each of the area directorates in Scotland, Wales and England for sickness benefit, invalidity benefit and income support, of 16 to 17-year-olds, for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value of claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema paid in 1993-94; what is his estimate for 1994-95; and if he will break down the figures by social security districts.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The estimated total annual benefit cost for the 12 months following prescription was £6 million. A similar cost, at 1993-94 prices, is estimated for the second and subsequent years.

DEFENCE

Landmines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the incidents involving British troops who are serving with United Nation forces in Bosnia have been caused by landmines produced or supplied by United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Hanley: None of which we are aware.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Royal Navy Armaments Depot, Trecwn

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date tenders were invited from estate agents and surveyors for the contract to market Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn.

Mr. Hanley: Invitations to tender for the contract to market RNAD Trecwn were sent to estate agents and surveyors on 28 January 1994.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which individuals or commercial enterprises plans, details or inventories of the facilities at Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn were supplied during 1992.

Mr. Hanley: As far as can be ascertained, no details or inventories of the facilities at RNAD Trecwn were released to non-MOD bodies in 1992.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which individuals or commercial enterprises (a) plans, (b) details and (c) inventories of the facilities of Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn have been supplied since July 1991.

Mr. Hanley: Details of the facilities in RNAD Trecwn have been made widely available to individuals, commercial enterprises, statutory bodies and local authorities. Although comprehensive records have not been maintained of all those to whom information has been made available, my Department is aware of over 80 individuals or organisations to whom this material has been provided.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department announced its intention to sell Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn.

Mr. Hanley: Together with the other "Options For Change" rationalisation measures, an announcement to close RNAD Trecwn was made on 16 July 1991.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date expressions of interest in buying Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn were first invited.

Mr. Hanley: Formal expressions of interest in buying RNAD Trecwn were first invited in the form of a press release on 11 April 1994 arranged by the Department's agents.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date (a) plans, (b) details and (c) inventories at Royal Navy armaments depot, Trecwn were first made publicly available to promote the sale at the base.

Mr. Hanley: Plans, details and inventories at RNAD Trecwn were launched to promote the sale at the establishment with the publication of the sales particulars on 27 April 1994, but details were available prior to that date on request from the Defence land agent.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which individuals or commercial enterprises details, plans or inventories at Royal Naval armaments depot, Trecwn were supplied during February 1993.

Mr. Hanley: The then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Sir A. Hamilton) undertook in February 1993 to send details of RNAD Trecwn and a site plan to Mr. R. Philipps and these were delivered to him by the Defence land agent in March of that year.

Naval Forces (Co-operation)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement outlining the number and dates of the meetings which have taken place over the past 12 months between representatives of his Department and representatives of the French Government on co-operation between the naval forces of the two nations; what was the nature of the subject matter covered in these discussions; and whether the operation of nuclear missile submarines was discussed.

Mr. Hanley: My Department holds regular discussions with French and other European nations during which many aspects of co-operation and equipment collaboration may be discussed, including issues related to nuclear deterrence.

Hazardous Waste

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 26 May, Official Report, column 232, what the national and international regulations governing the movement and destruction of hazardous waste lay down as the minimum technical requirements for the handling of this waste; and whether these requirements obtain in all the third-world countries to which hazardous and toxic waste is exported.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Transfrontier shipments of waste into and out of the United Kingdom are now governed by Council Regulation (EEC) No. 259/93, on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community. The regulation fulfils the EC's obligations under the Basel convention. Shipments of wastes covered by the regulation must comply with a wide range of international transport conventions, listed in annex 1 to the regulation, dealing with the safety of consignments in transit. Disposal facilities in Great Britain must operate in accordance with authorisations given under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and waste management licences issued by waste regulation authorities under part II of that Act. The regulation prohibits shipments of waste for disposal outside the European Community, other than to EFTA countries which are parties to the Basel convention.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what rules govern the acquiring of information by Ministers or Whips on issues outside their responsibility and not connected with constituency issues.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no formal rules on this matter beyond the obligation of all Ministers to preserve the privacy of Cabinet business and protect the security of Government documents.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what rules govern the passing of information with a commercial value gained by Ministers or Whips on to relatives.

Mr. Waldegrave: Ministers are expected to act in such a way as to uphold the highest standards and protect the integrity of public life.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what trends there have been in unemployment rates for the past 12 months for (a) females and (b) males (i) on a national basis and (ii) regionally.

Miss Widdecombe: Claimant unemployment rates for both males and females fell in every standard region of the United Kingdom between May 1993 and May 1994.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest official figures for the numbers of unemployed in (a) Greater London and (b) the Streatham parliamentary constituency; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on claimant unemployment is available from June 1983 and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. All figures are on the unadjusted basis.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest official figures for the numbers of unfilled vacancies in (a) Greater London and (b) the Streatham parliamentary constituency; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Comparable information is available from September 1985, down to the level of jobcentre offices, and on the unadjusted basis only. It can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the people of the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire placed in work by the Employment Service in the last 12 months were in (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) temporary employment giving the period of time contracted for and (ii) permanent jobs; and what information he has on the proportion of these jobs which paid less than a half of the current average hourly rate.

Miss Widdecombe: In the 12 months to May 1994, the latest available period, it is estimated that about 80 per cent. of all those placed into employment by the Employment Service in the Doncaster and the Mexborough jobcentre office areas were placed into permanent jobs, the rest in temporary jobs of up to six months in duration. It is also estimated that about 70 per cent. of vacancies filled in the four quarters to April 1994 were for the full-time jobs, the remainder were for part-time jobs. No information is available on the rates of pay that these jobs attracted.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures available for (a) males and (b) females; and what these figures are for (i) Burnley, (ii) Lancashire, (iii) the north West and (iv) England.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest unadjusted claimant unemployment numbers and rates relate to 12 May 1994 and are given in the table:

	Males		Females
	Number	Rate per cent.	Number	Rate per cent.
Burnley TTWA[1]	2,629	10·7	644	3·2

Barnsley/Doncaster TEC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list what training opportunities for disabled persons there are at the Barnsley/Doncaster training and enterprise council.

Miss Widdecombe: The training programmes open to people with disabilities are training for work and youth training. Disabled people are exempt from eligibility rules for these programmes.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the age, sex and the number of persons currently undergoing training at the Barnsley/Doncaster training and enterprise council; and what were the figures in each year since its inception.

Miss Widdecombe: Details of age groups are not collected and are therefore unavailable. Information by sex is shown in the table:

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

	Male	Female	Total
Youth training starts
1991-92 (actual—part-year only)	465	337	802
1992-93 (actual)	3,183	2,432	5,615

1993-94 (actual)	7,298	2,647	9,945

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled persons have been trained at the Barnsley/Doncaster TEC since its inception; and of these, how many received employment on completion.

Miss Widdecombe: Since the training and enterprise council's inception a total of 559 people with disabilities have started training; of these, 271—48 per cent.—have secured employment.

University Graduates

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) Welsh, (b) Scottish, (c) Northern Irish and (d) English graduates secured full-time employment within one year of graduation in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The table shows the percentage of first degree graduates who were in employment at the end of the calendar year in which they graduated, according to the location of their university. It is based on surveys published by the Universities' Statistical Record and excludes graduates from the former polytechnics and central institutions which received university status from 1992 onwards. Information is not available on the employment status of graduates one year after graduation, and on whether they are in full or part-time employment.

Per cent.

	1990	1991	1992	1993
Wales	50·1	39·9	36·3	40·8
Scotland	56·9	48·7	45·0	45·3

Trade Unionists

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of trade unionists in 1979, 1985, 1990 and 1993 as declared to the certification officer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that the numbers collated from the annual returns to him for the following years were as follows:

	Numbers
1979	13,212,354
1985	10,818,949
1990	9,810,019

The membership figures for 1993 will be collated from the annual returns submitted to the certification officer during 1994. These will be published in his annual report for 1994, which will be available in April-May 1995.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what decisions his Department have taken in respect of TECs in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's other involvement with TECs over the same period.

Miss Widdecombe: Every year the Department agrees objectives and resources for Training and Enterprise Councils in training, enterprise and vocational education.

Over the past 12 months, we have introduced new arrangements to measure TEC performance and secure continuous improvement. These are the publication of inter-TEC comparison tables and the development of a new longer-term contractual framework.

We have also emphasised the role of TECs as key private sector partners for the full range of economic development and regeneration activities through publication of new strategic guidance from six Government Departments.

National Union of Teachers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action the certification officer has taken to satisfy himself as to the accuracy of the annual returns from the National Union of Teachers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that in assessing the accuracy of the annual returns from any union, and in the absence of any complaint from a member, he relies on the report of the appropriately qualified auditor which must form part of the return.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the annual returns from the National Union of Teachers have been supplied on time each year since 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Section 32 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 requires that a trade union shall submit an annual return to the certification officer before 1 June in the calendar year following that to which it relates. I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that of the nine returns submitted by the National Union of Teachers since 1985, three were submitted by 1 June, four within the month of June, and the remaining two in the month of July.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the numerical strength of the National Union of Teachers as agreed by the certification officer for each year since 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that the total number of members shown on the annual returns submitted to him by the National Union of Teachers for each year since 1985 were as follows:

	Number
1985	253,672
1986	229,601
1987	224,538
1988	216,614
1989	213,482
1990	218,194

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he has made to notify former Skills Training Agency employees of the extension to the preferential reinstatement arrangements for staff employed by Astra Training Services Ltd.

Miss Widdecombe: The decision to extend the preferential reinstatement arrangements for staff employed by Astra Training Services was announced to Parliament on 17 January 1994, Official Report, column 427. Those staff employed by Astra Training Services who had already been in touch with the Department inquiring about prospects for reinstatement were informed personally of the extension. The departmental trade unions were notified formally on 25 January and their assistance sought to ensure that those affected were made aware of the announcement.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers and grades of former Skills Training Agency employees who have applied for preferential reinstatement to the Department of Employment since 1 January and the numbers and grades of those who have consequently been reinstated; and whether he will extend the arrangements for a further period.

Miss Widdecombe: The preferential reinstatement terms gave former Astra staff the right to consideration for posts within reasonable travelling distance of their home. Applications for reinstatement have been handled locally and no central register maintained. The information requested is not readily available, but I will write to the hon. Member in due course. When the extension was agreed it was anticipated that only a very small number of former Skills Training Agency staff were likely to benefit from these arrangements. I do know that some have done so. Although the period of the extension has now expired, the Department will continue to seek to find posts under the preferential terms until the end of the year for those who applied before the expiry date.

Job Finders' Grant

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evaluation he has done of the job finders' grant pilots being run in the east midlands and parts of the west midlands.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The job finders' grant pilots will be evaluated by an independent research company. A contract has been awarded for this study and work on the evaluation has begun.

Building and Construction Industry

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the incidence of accidents in the building and construction industry (a) in the first week of a new site and (b) on established sites.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to distinguish between (a) and (b) because information reported to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 does not contain the length of time a site has operated. The table provides overall recent trends in incidence rates for the construction industry for both employees and self-employed workers.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory base.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Advisory Council on the Employment of Disabled People and the local committees for the employment of people with disabilities, of which there are 60 in England, Scotland and Wales, were established by the Disabled Persons Employment Act 1944.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(2) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their responses to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None, although the Department voluntarily consults these bodies as appropriate.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Health and Safety

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Government's timetable for introducing the CONDAM health and safety regulations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission have made proposals on the implementation of the design and management aspects of the European Council's Temporary or Mobile Construction Sites Directive. I am currently considering them and the representations that I have received.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Naturalisation

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applicants for naturalisation, who had not been free of immigration conditions for 12 months at the time of their application, were granted British passports in 1992, 1993 and so far this year;

(2) how many sportsmen and women who applied for naturalisation and had not been free of immigration conditions for 12 months at the time of their application, were granted British passports in 1992, 1993 and so far this year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not recorded.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances an applicant for naturalisation is granted a British passport within 12 months of being granted indefinite leave to remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: An applicant for naturalisation who is not married to a British citizen is normally expected to have been free of immigration time restrictions, but there is discretion to waive this requirement in the special circumstances of any particular case. It is not possible to provide an exhaustive list of all the circumstances in which this discretion would be exercised in favour of an applicant, but we would consider doing so where the 12-months period has been missed by only a few months, provided that the other naturalisation requirements were met in full and that the applicant had well-established links with this country. We are normally prepared to overlook more than this only if there exist compelling reasons of a business or compassionate nature. We will also exercise this discretion if, at the time the application is considered and is otherwise in order, the 12-month period has been completed.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it takes to process an application for naturalisation; and what targets have been set in terms of upper time limits.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Average waiting times for certificates of naturalisation in May 1994 were 15 months. No upper time limits for completing the consideration of applications are set, but we aim to process all applications as expeditiously as possible while ensuring that the statutory requirements for naturalisation are met. The target is to reduce average waiting times to below 12 months.

Police Firearms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the result of the inquiry carried out by the Lancashire police force into the recent loss, and recovery in Blackburn town centre, of police revolvers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that disciplinary proceedings are being taken against a police officer.

Firearms

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes involving the use of firearms were committed in each of the past five years.

Mr. Maclean: Figures of notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which can be found in the Library—latest edition, 1992, Cm 2410, table 3.1.

Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of firearms held on certificate (a) at present and (b) one year ago.

Mr. Maclean: Estimates of the number of firearms held on certificate are published in paragraph 4 of Home Office statistical bulletins "Firearm Certificates Statistics, England and Wales". Copies for 1991 and 1992 can be found in the Library.

Figures for 1993 are not yet available.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information on the number of contracts let by the Home Office to each listed company for the specified consultancies and the total sum paid to each company for 1988 to 1991 and 1992-93 is given in the table. Information for the years prior to 1988-89 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Racially Motivated Attacks

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the reported number of racially motivated attacks by white people on non-white people within the Greater London area in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: Figures are not collected centrally on the ethnic origin of perpetrators of racial attacks in relation to the ethnic origin of their victims.

The number of white offenders in cases where there has been an arrest and the number of non-white victims of racial attacks recorded by the Metropolitan police service in the last three years are set out in the table. It cannot be assumed that white people were the offenders in all attacks involving non-white victims.

	1991	1992	1993
White offender	90	106	88
Non-white victim	424	430	495

Attacks are classified as incidents of violence against the person.

Information on the ethnic origin of offenders was not collected before 1991.

Police (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the studies and research findings on which he based his decision to introduce a system of performance-related pay for senior police officers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend took account of the argument in support of relating pay to overall performance contained in the report of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards. But the most influential factor in the Government's decision to introduce performance-related pay for all ranks in the police service was the benefit it will bring to the police service itself. Distinguishing especially good performance from the average performance provides an incentive to people to improve the effectiveness of their contribution, bringing added benefit to both the organisation and the individual, and is a perfectly reasonable thing to do.

Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the extent to which a small number of offenders commit a disproportionate number of offences, the percentage (a) of each age group and (b) of the total population that such a group constitutes and the percentage (i) of crime committed by the age group and (ii) of total crime committed in England and Wales that is attributable to such a group.

Mr. Maclean: The information in the following table is taken from a birth cohort study using the "Offenders Index":

Table: Offenders born in 1953: Estimated[1] percentage of the population convicted[2] of six or more offences, at selected ages, and the percentage of the total number of convictions[3] of those born in 1953 attributable to these offenders

Prisoner Escapes

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped from prisons in England and Wales on each day from 17 to 20 June; and if he will list the number of prisoners involved in each escape, the prisons from which they escaped, and whether they have been recaptured.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 28 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about escape statistics during the period 17-20 June.

During this period, one prisoner escaped from HMYOI Wetherby. No-one else is believed to have been involved. The prisoner concerned returned to Wetherby on 22 June 1994.

Full Sutton Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the disturbance at HMP Full Sutton on the weekend of 17-19 June; what damage occurred; what is the estimated cost of that damage; and what injuries there were to (a) staff and (b) inmates.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 28 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the disturbance at HMP Full Sutton on the weekend of 17th-19th June; what damage occurred; what is the estimated cost of that damage and what injuries there were to (a) staff and (b) inmates.

No disturbance took place at Full Sutton on the weekend of 17th-19th June. The only recorded incidents which took place during that period were two minor fires in prisoners' cells which occurred separately. No injuries were sustained by either staff or inmates and the damage caused to clothes, bedding and a single item of furniture were negligible in value. In both cases these small fires were extinguished by staff before the arrival of the fire brigade.

TREASURY

Crown Estate

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether nature conservation orders made under section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 apply to land owned or leased by the Crown Estate Commissioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 is applicable to Crown lands, including the Crown Estate, as set out in section 67 of the Act.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what actions taken within the last three years by the Crown Estate Commission has had

"regard to the desirability of conserving the natural beauty and amenity of the countryside"

as required under section 11 of the Countryside Act 1968.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The policies of the Crown Estate Commissioners on environmental issues are set out in their statement "Stewardship in Action". Activities associated with these policies are described in the annual reports submitted to Parliament each year by the commissioners. Copies of these documents have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much foreshore land is owned by the Crown Estate; and how much land owned by the Crown Estate is leased to (a) shooting organisations, (b) conservation bodies and (c) other bodies.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Crown Estate owns about half the foreshore in the United Kingdom. In England, Wales and Northern Ireland, this amounts to some 1,600 miles of which the shooting rights have been leased on about 130 miles, and 480 miles have been leased to conservation bodies. The remainder of leased foreshore —very little is not leased—is let, mainly to local authorities and port and harbour authorities. In Scotland there is a public right to shoot, so that no shooting rights are leased. There, 3,100 miles of foreshore are owned by the Crown Estate of which 84 miles are leased to conservation bodies and 470 to other bodies, mainly local authorities, ports and harbours.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responsibilities the Crown Estate Commissioners have for wildlife conservation on land that they own or lease.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Crown Estate Commissioners have a duty under the provisions of the Crown Estate Act 1961 to maintain and enhance the value of the estate and the return obtained from it, but with due regard to the requirements of good management. Within this framework the commissioners are committed to an overall objective of balancing environmental with commercial and other needs in order to achieve effective stewardship. Strategies to support this objective are in place in each business group, but more particularly in the agricultural and marine estates, where wildlife conservation is a high priority. More specifically, the commissioners co-operate fully in the work of statutory agencies responsbible for the protection of wildlife in designated areas—for example, sites of special scientific interest and marine nature reserves. Full details of the policy of commissioners are set out in "Stewardship in Action", which can be found in the House of Commons Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United Artists (Cable Laying)

Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of whether United Artists is fulfilling the terms of its licence to install fibre optic cables in the Basildon area and that the criteria for siting of junction boxes is in accordance with the terms of the licence.

Mr. McLoughlin: Regulatory responsibility for ensuring that United Artists fulfills the terms of its build programme rests with Oftel and it is content that the company is meeting its build obligations. The standard of the company's street works and the siting of junction boxes are Highway Authority matters. United Artists' licence includes conditions designed to ensure that the company operates in a responsible manner and adheres to all relevant street works legislation. Street works in the maintainable highway are subject to the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, and its associated regulations, which are enforced by local highway authorities. The company's licence permits it to install junction boxes subject to certain conditions. The company is required to agree guidelines with the planning and highway authorities on the positioning of its above-ground apparatus. It is also required to inform the local authority of its intention to install apparatus and identify where they propose to place the apparatus so that the local authority have an opportunity to make conditions on the siting of the junction box. I have not received any evidence to suggest that junction boxes are not being sited in accordance with licence terms.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will visit the Royal Mail sorting office at Queensferry, Deeside, Clwyd.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no plans at present to visit Queensferry post office sorting office.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the Insolvency Service for closure of files (a) before 8 July and (b) for 1994.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The majority of the Department's agencies are set annual targets. For 1994-95 the Insolvency Service has been set the target of reducing the number of its open cases to a level equivalent to approximately 12 months' input. This will result in the closure of 53,000 cases.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of the increased number of insolvency completions on the detection of fraud and the prosecution and disqualification of delinquent company directors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Although some specialist resource will be diverted to assist the process of increased case completions, the Insolvency Service still anticipates that it will devote some 25 per cent. more manpower resource to prosecution and disqualification activity in 1994-95 then in 1993-94.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much extra funding is being allocated to the Insolvency Service in the current year for (a) file closure and (b) fraud investigation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A total of £1·831 million has been allocated to the service from my Department's running costs for 1994-95 to fund the additional work required to meet the case closure target of 53,000. The additional allocation provided in relation to fraud investigation for 1994-95 is £1 million.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost to the Insolvency Service of employing private sector secondees.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: For 1994-95 the estimated cost of employing private sector secondees and/or of engaging other private sector resources on a short-term basis will be £1·12 million.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on the investigation by the Insolvency Service of potential offences or possible areas of investigation when reviewing whether insolvencies can be completed; and what are the reasons for this policy.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The investigation of an insolvency or the consideration of possible offences can be and often is conducted independently of its administration. Where, in reviewing a case with a view to the conclusion of the administration, matters are identified which, prima facie, require further investigation those matters receive full consideration.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his assessment of how the Insolvency Service's recent investigation in the local office information system will assist (a) the mechanical processing work of the service and (b) the investigation work of the service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Insolvency Service's investment in LOIS—local office information system—links a relational database to office automation software. The system assists official receivers in streamlining case administration, particularly in the document production area; and it will provide management with additional information relevant to the allocation of resources and monitoring of performance.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what effect increases in the rate of closure of files by the Insolvency Service will have on checks for fraud and prosecution of fraudulent directors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. The additional cases to be closed in 1994-95 will already have been vetted for any requirement for further investigation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many private sector secondees are currently on loan to the Insolvency Service; and what work they are doing.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A total of five private secondees are currently in post in the Insolvency Service and a further two are due to start on 4 July 1994. Three of the secondees are working in the disqualification unit on disqualification matters and two are working in official receivers' offices assisting examiners. The two secondees due to start on 4 July 1994 will be working in the disqualification unit on disqualification matters.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Insolvency Service targets are affected by the completion of extra insolvencies in the current financial year; and to what extent.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlie the allocation of time in the Insolvency Service between mechanical processing work and core investigation functions.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A minimum amount of routine administration work has to be done on each insolvency. The Insolvency Service seeks to devote the minimum level of resource to such work consistent with a proper discharge of official receivers' statutory duty so that it can maximise the resource devoted to its investigative role.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps have been taken to implement the recommendations of the 18th report of 1993-94 from the Public Accounts Committee on the Insolvency Service executive agency and company director disqualifications.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Government's response to the 18th report of the Committee of Public Accounts on the Insolvency Service executive agency and company director disqualifications will be published in due course.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many officials have been to the Insolvency Service on six-month contracts since the establishment of the service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many disqualification proceedings are expected to be issued in the current financial year, identifying those proceedings initiated by insolvency practitioners and those by the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There is no target for the number of disqualification proceedings to be issued. On present information, it would appear likely that in 1994-95 between 750 and 800 disqualification proceedings will be commenced, of which between 60 per cent. and 70 per cent. are likely to relate to cases reported on by insolvency practitioners while the remainder will relate to cases dealt with by official receivers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the prosecution rate for inadequate accounting records by the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The allocation and deployment of additional investigative resources will enable the Insolvency Service to increase the number of reports produced identifying criminal offences, including those relating to a failure to maintain adequate accounting records.

Company Directors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his plans to increase the conviction rate of directors who have traded fraudulently.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Prosecutions by my Department for fraudulent trading resulted in 11 convictions in 1991-92, 24 convictions in 1992-93 and 32 convictions in 1993-94. In relation to offences of fraudulent trading, as with other prosecutions for which it is responsible, my Department's practice is to prosecute offenders wherever there is a realistic prospect of a conviction, where the other criteria in the code for Crown prosecutors are satisfied and where bringing such charges will enable the prosecution to put before the court an accurate picture of the defendant's wrongdoing as a whole.

These criteria will remain the basis for prosecution decisions.

Pulp and Paper

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made as to the adequacy of the supply of home-produced or imported pulp and paper for packaging and production; and if he will publish a table showing (a) United Kingdom production, imports and net home disposals of pulp and paper by end-use in each month this year to date compared to 1989, (b) the rate of return on capital required to make it profitable for United Kingdom pulp and paper manufacturers to invest in new capacity in the United Kingdom at current rates of exchange and (c) the actual rates of return on replacement and historic cost in 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates of the supply of pulp and paper for packaging and production are a matter for industry. Official statistics on manufacturers sales, imports and exports are published annually by the Central Statistical Office in Business Monitor PAS4710. Copies of this publication are available in the Library of the House. There are no official data on rates of return, but information may be available from commercial organisations which analyse company accounts.

AGIP (Africa) Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what transactions his Department has had with AGIP (Africa) Ltd.

Mr. Needham: My oil and gas projects and supplies office has not had any transactions with AGIP (Africa) Ltd.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions his Department has taken in respect of TECs over the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has developed an increasingly close working relationship with the TEC movement over the last 12 months. We have placed particular emphasis on their role in bringing together Business Link partnerships in each local area and the importance of completing the national Business Link network by the end of 1995.

The Government's White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" and our strategic guidance to TECs, published in May 1994, have both confirmed the importance of TECs working with other partners to agree strategies for business competitiveness and sustainable economic growth.

To support this work and provide a more secure basis for planning business support services, we have decided that, from 1 April 1995, DTI funding to TECs will be for a three-year period which will be rolled forward each year. However, three-year rolling funding will be available only to those TECs which have obtained a three-year licence from the Government office in their region and which can demonstrate satisfactory progress in establishing a Business Link.

Markets

Dr. Spink: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to change regulations relating to markets overt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A Bill to abolish the rule of market overt, which has Government support, is at present before Parliament.

Standing Charges (Electricity)

Dr. Spink: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the regional electricity companies regarding their policies on (a) standing charges in general, (b) standing charges for prepayment meters and (c) where consumption is low; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I discuss a wide range of issues with representatives of the regional electricity companies from time to time. Electricity charges are primarily a matter for the companies themselves and for the Director General of Electricity Supply. I understand that the director general is currently considering the issue of standing charges as part of his review of the RECs' distribution price controls.

Pakistan (Trade Figures)

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the trade figures between the United Kingdom and Pakistan over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: Between 1989 and 1993 the value of United Kingdom exports to Pakistan increased at an annual rate of 9·7 per cent. while imports increased by 11·7 per cent.

Nigeria

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning the current level of United Kingdom investment in Nigeria and in the Nigerian oil industry; and what steps he is taking to further the interests of British investors in Nigeria.

Mr. Needham: According to the latest available information, the book value of United Kingdom assets in Nigeria in 1992 was £476 million. The value of United Kingdom investment in the Nigerian oil industry was £324·6 million.

My Department is mounting a series of seminars entitled "Opportunity Africa" in conjunction with chambers of commerce around the United Kingdom which will feature Nigeria. We also plan to publish Nigerian market reports on ports management, power generation, agriculture and mining.

We continue to encourage inward British investment where there is a good prospect of repatriation of profits. There is at present a need for the Nigerian Government to provide an enabling environment for investment.

We continue to lobby for a change in the current Nigerian legislation which limits existing investors to a maximum of 40 per cent. foreign shareholding. Although Nigeria has abolished this restriction for new investors, it has refused to make any changes to the rule for established companies because of political sensitivities.

Nigeria

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Nigeria; what were the comparable figures for each of the previous three years; and what particular steps he intends to take to encourage further improvements in United Kingdom trade with Nigeria.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 June 1994]: In 1993, the United Kingdom had a trade surplus with Nigeria worth £522 million. In 1991 and 1992, the trade surplus with Nigeria was worth £295 million and £455 million respectively.

As one of our major markets, Nigeria receives particular attention from my department in the key sectors of oil and gas, power generation and distribution, telecommunications, agriculture/water resources, ports management, mining equipment, railway equipment and pharmaceuticals.

EC Industry Council

Mr. Stephen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the EC Industry Council held in Luxembourg on 22 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Council had a general debate on the report of the Bangemann group on Europe and the Global Information Society which has been presented to the Corfu European Council. There was welcome emphasis on the role of the private sector, liberalisation and market forces in developing the information society.

Preliminary conclusions were adopted by the Council on the Commission's integrated programme in favour of small and medium-sized enterprises and the craft sector. This brings together existing measures and new proposals in favour of SME's within an overall framework. The Council agreed to complete its detailed examination of the programme by the end of the year.

The Council heard a report from the Commission on the progress of the OECD negotiations on shipbuilding subsidies and emphasised the importance of concluding these in July as long as the few outstanding issues could be resolved satisfactorily.

On steel, the Commission gave a progress report on the implementation of the article 95 state aid decisions approved in December 1993. In response to a request from the United Kingdom the Commission agreed to a minute statement that it would not hesitate to take action where breach of the article 95 decisions was established. The Commission also reported on progress being made with the restructuring plan for the Community's steel industry and informed the Council that, using its own powers under the steel aids code, it intended to permit Italy to give aid to assist capacity reductions among its private sector producers. The majority of the Council supported the Commission's approach. The United Kingdom was among those expressing reservations about the Commission's interpretation of the aids code, but we were able to obtain agreement to tighter conditions being attached to any aid granted. Member states will be consulted on resulting aid applications from Italy on a case-by-case basis.

Mahogany

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the sources within the Amazon rain forest area of the mahogany provided by Brazilian suppliers to the principal British importers.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 June 1994]: There are no official sources for information on the importation of Brazilian mahogany into the United Kingdom. The information has not been available since 1992 because the United Kingdom trade classification no longer separately identifies mahogany from several other non-coniferous woods.

Information on United Kingdom importing companies and Brazilian exporting companies is not available.

Illegal Arms Trading

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what knowledge the Government had of the activities of Mr. William Harper, Lieutenant-Colonel Eric Matson and Mr. Michael Aspin before their conviction in 1988 for illegal arms trading; and whether the Government had relevant information about these activities which was not revealed at the trial.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 June 1994]: As far as can be ascertained, my Department had no knowledge of the activities of the three men.

European Regional Funds

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each area in the United Kingdom that has been designated eligible for objective 5b status.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 June 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates) on 22 February 1994, Official Report, column 173.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Broadcasting

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if the terms of reference of the inquiry into the future of the BBC include the possibility of scrapping the BBC in its present form and the creation of a new and cheaper form of public service broadcasting.

Mr. Brooke: Our consultation document on the future of the BBC, published in November 1992, set out the key issues for consideration, including the range of the BBC's programmes and services and how they should be financed. I plan to publish a White Paper shortly, setting out our proposals.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many television licences were sold in 1993; how many unlicensed television sets were estimated to be operating in 1993; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the estimated cost, per annum, of identifying and prosecuting people who do not have a television licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Television licensing records relate to the number of licences in force, rather than the number of licences sold, and to the financial rather than the calendar year.

The number of licences in force at 31 March 1994 was 20·75 million. The estimated number of households with unlicensed television sets at that date was 1·61 million, and the estimated number with a black and white licence but a colour set was 570,700. The cost to the BBC of identifying and prosecuting television licence evaders in 1993-94 was £15·9 million.

Broadcasting

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will now make a statement on the future of the BBC charter.

Mr. Brooke: I plan to publish a White Paper very shortly.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will publish for each county in Wales, for each local authority in Wales and for Wales as a whole the numbers of people (a) able to claim concessions to their television licence fee and (b) currently claiming such concessions to their television licence in respect of being registered blind or partially sighted;

(2) what was the level of television licence fee for colour television users in each of the past 10 years; and what was the level of television licence fee concession paid to blind or partially blind people in the past 10 years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 June 1994]: From March 1985 to March 1988 the colour television licence fee was £58. Since then, the fee has been increased annually each April as follows:

Year	£
1988	62·50
1989	66·00
1990	71·00
1991	77·00
1992	80·00
1993	83·00
1994	84·50

The reduction in the television licence fee for registered blind people has remained at £1·25 since separate radio licences were abolished in 1971.

I understand that the number of registered blind people in Wales at March 1993 was 9,595. It is not known how many of these own a television set. The number of people in Wales claiming the reduction for registered blind people is not available as records are not held in this form. Registered partially sighted people are not entitled to a reduction on their television licence fee on account of being partially sighted.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Ker Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services since his Department was created.

Mr. Sproat: Since my Department was established in April 1992, it has let contracts to the consultants listed as shown in the chart.

In addition, my Department has awarded a call-off contract to Touche Ross for audit services to be provided to its sponsored bodies. It has no minimum or maximum value and payment takes place between the sponsored body and Touche Ross.

Museums

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what Government resources are allocated via museum bodies to assist with annual running costs of any museum; and what policy is used to determine such allocations.

Mr. Sproat: My Department's grant in aid to the Museums and Galleries Commission includes £1·02 million in 1994-95 towards the cost of supporting the Tyne and Wear museum service. My Department gives no other assistance towards the running costs of museums other than those museums it funds directly.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what decisions his Department has taken in respect of TECs over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. Sproat: My Department has taken no decisions in respect of TECs. The Department's only involvement has been to invite the appropriate TEC to attend each of the regional conferences which we are holding.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions will be held shortly between the World bank and the Government of Kenya about support for Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World bank will be meeting donors and the Government of Kenya on 20 July.

African Development Bank

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the task force on project quality in the African development bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the work of the know-how fund.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund, Britain's programme of bilateral technical assistance to central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, now covers 24 countries in the region. Disbursements for 1993-94 were in the region of £61 million. A list of projects has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about Somali refugees in Yemen caught up in the civil war; and what efforts are being made by the United Nations and humanitarian organisations to take assistance to the Somali refugees.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There have been reports of over 170 fatalities and many more wounded in the Al Koud camp, east of Aden. Following negotiations with both parties to the conflict, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees evacuated the remaining refugees to safe areas. There is concern for the safety of Somali refugees in Aden itself. UNHCR is discussing with the local authorities the possibility of moving them to another location in Yemen.

To date the United Kingdom has responded by contributing £100,000 to the ICRC appeal and a further United States $50,000 has been chanelled through the International Organisation for Migration.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's involvement with TECs.

Mr. David Davis: The Cabinet Office Office of Public Service and Science is involved with TECs in a number of ways.

First, it has made itself known to all TECs as the recognised industry training organisation for the civil service. It has adopted this role in support of its objective to encourage and support Departments and agencies in meeting the national targets for education and training. This role is publicised to TECs through guides issued by the National Council for Industry Training Organisations, of which the Cabinet Office (OPSS) is a member.

Secondly, the Cabinet Office organised seminars in London, Leeds, Cardiff and Edinburgh during 1993 as part of the programme of active support for the achievement of Investors in People across the civil service. The local TEC, or local enterprise company in the case of Edinburgh, was closely involved in the planning of each seminar, was consulted on likely local interest and supplied a speaker on each occasion.

Finally, in terms of domestic involvement with TECs, different parts of the Department have or will have direct contact with their local TEC as they make progress with their own commitment to the Investors in People initiative.

Child Support Act

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what limitations are placed on individuals employed in the civil service regarding campaigning to change the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Waldegrave: No specific rules or guidance have been issued on campaigning to change the Child Support Act 1991. Departments and agencies that have responsibilities under the Act may, however, require their staff to avoid public comment on Government policy in this area in accordance with chapter 4 of the personnel management section of the civil service management code.

Civil Service

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many non-European Union nationals are working for the British civil service in Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: All officials working in the EC institutions, including those on secondment from the United Kingdom civil service, work for those institutions. There are non-European Union nationals working for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in Europe and for the United Kingdom civil service in this country, but their numbers could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the Government's policy on answering under the citizens charter questions from members of the public concerning Government policy and its effect where the information can be obtained from the Central Statistical Office databank on payment to an outside contractor.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's policy under the citizens charter of extending access to official information is supported by the code of practice on access to Government information. The code does not, however, require Departments to provide information which is provided as part of an existing charged service other than through that service. Any data on the CSO databank can be obtained directly from the CSO as well as from outside contractors.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arable Subsidy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by county the amount of European Union arable subsidy received for the latest year for which figures are available; and what were the figures for each of the past four years.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 448-50. The arable area payments scheme was introduced in 1992 and first payments were made in 1993. There are no comparable figures for previous years.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Sir John Wheeler: It is not possible to provide the information except at disproportionate cost. Obscene Publications Branch

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the role in the Province of the obscene publications branch of Scotland Yard.

Sir John Wheeler: The obscene publications branch of New Scotland Yard has no operational role in Northern Ireland. Criminal investigations into breaches of the obscenity laws are a matter for the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

TRANSPORT

Roadworthiness Checks

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the last financial year the number of spot checks carried out on heavy goods vehicles, the number of immediate prohibitions, delayed prohibitions and defect notices issued.

Mr. Key: The table gives the information for roadworthiness spot checks.

1993-94

	Number
Heavy Goods Vehicles and HGV Trailers	134,266
Immediate Prohibitions	8,951
Delayed Prohibitions	10,068
Defect Notices	18,206

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what studies his Department has commissioned into the effect on traffic congestion of the use by heavy goods vehicles of the inside three lanes on four-lane motorways;

(2) what discussions he has had with motoring organisations regarding the use by heavy goods vehicles of the inside three lanes on four-lane motorways.

Mr. Key: I have commissioned no specific studies of the use made by heavy goods vehicles of different lanes on four-lane motorways nor have I consulted motoring organisations on this subject.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to promote the use of low or zero-emission vehicles for public transport services; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to promote the use of low or zero-emission public transport service vehicles to improve air quality in cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: There are no plans to promote low or zero-emission vehicles specifically for public transport services. However, the Department of Transport, in recognition of the contribution that motor vehicles make to urban pollution, will continue to set increasingly stringent emission standards for all motor vehicle categories. We are also conducting research to evaluate the role that alternative fuels and control technologies could play in minimising vehicle emissions.

Last March, I announced a £1·2 million collaborative project involving the Departments of Transport, Trade and Industry, and Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to trial alternative fuels. This project will compare panel vans and urban buses using compressed natural gas, liquid petroleum gas, electricity and biodiesel with conventional fuels. Sixteen buses are being converted using funds exceeding £200,000 from local authority budgets, £116,000 of which was allocated by the Department of Transport.

In parallel studies, the Department is assessing the effectiveness of various emission control technologies, including particulate traps, that could also help achieve lower emissions.

MV Derbyshire

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete his investigation of the facts presented to him by the chief inspector of marine accidents following receipts of the evidence and footage from Oceaneering Technologies in respect of the wreck of the Derbyshire, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is too early to say when the examination of the material by the marine accident investigation branch will be complete to enable the chief inspector to be in a position to advise my right hon. Friend on the course of action which should be followed.

Automatic Train Protection

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received British Rail's report on automatic train protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Sir Bob Reid has sent my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State a report setting out the results of the BR's work evaluating the technical trials, costs and benefits of ATP systems. No decisions have yet been taken on implementation. My right hon. Friend has asked the Health and Safety Commission and Railtrack for their views on the report. The HSC's advice is expected in the autumn.

The report's findings will be made available by Railtrack in the next few weeks. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Rail Franchising Director

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what directions he has given to the Franchising Director in respect of payment of subsidy, where services do not operate.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has given no directions to the Franchising Director on this issue.

London Underground (Fires)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fires have occurred (a) on London Underground property and (b) in London Underground stations in each of the last 10 years; which stations they were in; and how many of them involved escalators.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The information is not held in the form requested. Figures are readily available only from 1990 onwards, and are not held for individual stations.

Confirmed Fire Incidents on London Underground 1990 to date

Year	In Stations (excluding escalators)	On Escalators	Other Property (track and rolling stock)	Total
1990	658	136	1,830	2,624
1991	80	73	993	1,146
1992	59	46	525	630
1993	56	11	365	432
1994 to date	13	5	52	70

Safety

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department gives to value-for-money performance indicators for transport safety measures; and what research has been undertaken by his Department into such indicators.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 27 June 1994]: My Department strongly supports the use of value-for-money criteria in the consideration of transport safety measures and the need for systematic assessment of costs and benefits in the introduction of safety legislation. A range of research has been commissioned by the Department into the valuation of safety benefits, particularly in relation to road safety. The public transport operators also commission research in which the Department takes a close interest.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions officials of his Department have had with the National Audit Office concerning value-for-money performance indicators for transport safety measures.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 27 June 1994]: Officials from my Department participated in the National Audit Office seminar in July 1993 and have more recently had a number of informal discussions on performance measures for transport safety.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions are given to public inquiries after transport disasters regarding (a) the prioritisation of any recommendation produced by such inquiries and (b) the estimation of the costs of implementing any recommendations produced by such inquiries.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The Department believes it important that consideration is given to the costs as well as the likely benefits of implementing any recommendations produced by public inquiries after major transport disasters. This is reflected in the terms of reference of Lord Donaldson's inquiry into the prevention of pollution from merchant shipping which required that due consideration should be given to the economic implications of any new measures. The Department attaches importance to ensuring that any future inquiries also include this requirement. The Department has not issued specific instructions about the prioritisation of recommendations.

Air Misses

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the number of category A air misses between civilian and military aircraft for each year since 1989.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 June 1994]: According to the information supplied by the National Air Traffic Services' joint air miss section, the number of category A air misses between civilian and military aircraft for each year since 1989, are as follows:

Year	Total
1989	12
1990	12
1991	8
1992	9
1993	4

PRIME MINISTER

Government Ministers

Q9. Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to reducing the total number of Government Ministers.

The Prime Minister: None.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the legislative measures for the benefit of disabled people which were introduced during the period that he served as Minister with responsibility for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: During the relatively short period when I was Minister for disabled people—September 1986 to June 1987—the Government introduced a number of legislative measures, including those which improved local authority services for disabled people bringing them additional rights of assessment; requiring authorities to consider the needs of carers; and improving information and consultation.

Since I became Prime Minister disabled people have benefited from many more important initiatives such as the introduction of the disability living and working allowances, the access-to-work scheme and improvements to promote the integration of disabled pupils within mainstream schools. I have also made clear our commitment to do still more.

Corfu Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals on environmental protection the United Kingdom has submitted to the European Union Heads of Government summit in Corfu.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom did not submit any specific environmental protection matters for discussion.

Japan (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what communications he has had with his Japanese counterpart, Mr. Hata, in regard to his statement to the Japanese Diet on 17 June that Japan has the capacity to build nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office today.

Value Added Tax

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions he has made statements in the House on whether he had plans to increase value added tax, both in terms of scope and rate, since he assumed office.

The Prime Minister: I have made statements in the House concerning VAT on numerous occasions, details of which are available in the Library of the House.

AGIP (Africa) Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether he will appoint an independent committee, like that of Lord Justice Scott, to investigate all aspects of money laundering by AGIP (Africa) Ltd;

(2) whether, further to his correspondence with the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, he has initiated inquiries into money laundering involving AGIP (Africa) Ltd.

The Prime Minister: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales investigated the allegations of misconduct on the part of its members and concluded that there was insufficient evidence to justify bringing a disciplinary case against them.

Union Flag (Public Buildings)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister what action he will take to promote the presence of the Union flag in Government and local government offices, institutions and law courts.

The Prime Minister: The Union flag is flown on Government buildings on approximately 20 occasions each year at Her Majesty's command to highlight days of national celebration. Other than that there are no restrictions; local authorities and other organisations are free to display the Union flag as often as they wish, both inside and outside their buildings. While I have no plans to regulate further the display of the Union flag I would welcome its more frequent use as a symbol of our national pride and unity.

Roberto Calvi

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what inquiries he has made in connection with the Banco Ambrosiano official Roberto Calvi.

The Prime Minister: None. The circumstances of Mr. Calvi's death were fully investigated by the police.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 28 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Jill Rutter

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister in what grade Ms Jill Rutter is employed as a civil servant; and what are her responsibilities.

The Prime Minister: Ms Rutter is a grade 5 civil servant, seconded to the policy unit from Her Majesty's Treasury. Her responsibilities cover transport, among a range of other issues.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister in what capacity Ms Jill Rutter attended a meeting of the Railtrack board on 17 June; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Ms Rutter has never attended a Railtrack board meeting. On Friday 17 June, she attended a meeting of officials at the Department of Transport, at the invitation of Department of Transport officials, part of which was attended by some Railtrack employees.

EDUCATION

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 502, what is his current policy on the holdback of grants from the Further Education Funding Council; and whether the grant will be paid to the council to allow it discretion over payments to the individual colleges when they have satisfied its conditions.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend's policy on this matter is unchanged. He will reach a decision in due course.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to prevent colleges of further and higher education from withholding (a) pay increases, (b) references, (c) in-service training and (d) special benefits to those seeking early retirement and other means of pressure on to staff who refuse to sign the College Employers' Forum contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: It is for each college to decide what action it will take in respect of the introduction of new contracts.

Student Loans

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations he has received in the last two years on the subject of student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Since June 1992 my right hon. Friend has received 175 letters from hon. Members and members of the public on the subject of student loans. In addition my right hon. Friend has received a number of letters on the issue of student support generally. It is not possible to say how many of these mentioned student loans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will establish a permanent organisation for investigation of accusations in respect of (a) nepotism, (b) preferential contract deals, (c) conflicts of interest and (d) other forms of corruption by principals and governors of colleges of further and higher education and universities; and how many investigations of individual colleges he has ordered to date.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend sees no need for a permanent organisation for the investigation of complaints.

In the case of an institution in the further education sector my right hon. Friend may intervene under section 57 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 in the event of mismanagement, on the advice of the Further Education Funding Council, or breach of duty. He has requested the FEFC to carry out investigations into the governance and management of two institutions in the further education sector.

Under section 81 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, if it appears to my right hon. Friend that the financial affairs of any institution within the higher education sector have been mismanaged, he may, after consulting the Higher Education Funding Council and the institution, make directions to the council about the provision of financial support in respect of the activities carried out by the institution. No such direction to the council has been made in respect of any higher education institution.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 805, on new contracts for staff of colleges of further education, what authority the Further Education Funding Council has to bring pressure or offer inducements to colleges to move existing staff on to new contracts; and how it proposes to secure uniformity of conditions in colleges.

Mr. Boswell: The FEFC has asked each college to sign a declaration that contracts for new staff satisfy the two conditions that I set out in the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 16 February, Official Report, column 842. It is for each college to decide what form of contract it wishes to introduce for new staff and whether it can then sign the declaration.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what instructions or advice his Department offers to firms auditing the accounts of colleges of further and higher education for reporting on staff privileges, membership of private health insurance paid for by the colleges or for the detection of fraud, nepotism or sweetheart contracts by governors and principals.

Mr. Boswell: Colleges of further education are required by their instruments of government to appoint auditors and to carry out audit work in accordance with the requirements of the Further Education Funding Council. The Further Education Funding Council Unit, the precursor of the Further Education Funding Council, issued in July 1992 advice on external audit, including guidance on the appointment of auditors, scope of audit and reporting arrangements. The Comptroller and Auditor General and the Council both have powers to inspect colleges' accounts where they consider this appropriate.

Colleges of higher education are subject to the auditing requirements of the Higher Education Funding Council for England. The Council's audit code of practice was issued in July 1993. Higher education institutions funded by the Higher Education Funding Council for England are required, from 1994-95, to disclose the actual total emoluments of the vice-chancellor, director or principal, including benefits in kind valued as cash.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 503, whether his Department has asked any colleges for explanations about the forms of contract they have agreed with staff, or approved any contract offered by any college;

(2) what explanation he has sought from Manchester college of arts and technology about its new contract terms for staff.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has asked Manchester college of arts and technology to explain how its agreement with the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education allows it to sign the declaration to the FEFC that its new contract of employment for lecturing staff is significantly different from its current contract of employment. It has not sought an explanation from any other college.

Universities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to include the bonds proposed to be issued on behalf of universities in the public sector borrowing requirements; and what factors he intends to take into account to assess whether such inclusion was required.

Mr. Boswell: Universities are classified as private institutions and loans they raise from the private finance sector do not add to the PSBR. The definition of the public sector is essentially a matter for the Central Statistical Office.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the effect of his Department's funding for special educational needs grants for education support and training on other education budgets.

Mr. Forth: The GEST programme prioritises less than 2 per cent. of overall LEA expenditure. In 1994-95, there are five SEN grants which total £23·7 million of the overall budget for GEST of £270·6 million.

It is for LEAs themselves to decide how much of their overall education budget to spend respectively on special educational needs and other areas of education.

Nursery Classes

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many full-time equivalent pupils in designated nursery classes in January 1993 were born between (a) 1 September 1987 and 31 December 1987, (b) 1 January 1988 and 31 March 1988 and (c) 1 April 1988 and 31 August 1988 in each local education authority;

(2) how many full-time equivalent pupils in primary schools, though not in designated nursery classes, in January 1993 were born between (a) 1 September 1987 and 31 December 1987, (b) 1 January 1988 and 31 March 1988 and (c) 1 April 1988 and 31 August 1988 in each local education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of pupils aged four at the beginning of the school year 1992-93 being taught in nursery and infant classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England is shown in the table.

Obscene Publications Branch

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance his Department has issued to head teachers or governors on computer pornography in schools; how his future plans for tackling it have been affected by the possible closure of the obscene publications branch at Scotland Yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The National Council for Educational Technology is developing guidance for parents and schools on access to computers. This will include advice on computer pornography and will be available later this year. The review of the obscene publications branch is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, but I understand that there are no plans to reduce police effort in this area.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultation there has been with teachers' unions on the future of the obscene publications branch at Scotland Yard.

Mr. Forth: None.

Professor Tim Brighouse

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much public money has been paid, or will be paid, to cover costs incurred by him as a result of Professor Tim Brighouse's successful High Court action against him.

Mr. Patten: None.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list each chairman of the Student Loans Company since its inception, the date of their appointment and who made it, the salary they received and the companies of which they were directors at the time they were also chairman of the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Boswell: The shareholders have appointed three chairmen to the Student Loans Company: Mr. John Vereker was appointed, unpaid, on 21 December 1989 and was also a director of the Institute of Manpower Studies; Mr. Malcolm Hurlston was appointed on 6 September 1991 at a salary of £12,000 and was a director of Registry Trust Ltd. and ESOP Centre Ltd. and Mr. Kenneth Young was appointed on 28 July 1992 at a salary of £12,000 and has served as deputy chairman of the Post Office, chairman of Post Office Counters Ltd., Girobank plc and Subscription Services Ltd. and is a non-executive director of FBG Pensions Ltd. and FBG Pensions Investments Ltd.

National Youth Agency

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for the future of the National Youth Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: A policy review of the National Youth Agency is under way. Contributions to an assessment of the general effectiveness of the agency have been invited from interested bodies. My right hon. Friend plans to announce the outcome of the review in the autumn. Meanwhile, I will be placing in the Library today a copy of the letter of consultation to interested bodies which includes details of the terms of reference of the policy review.

Educational Achievement

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will conduct research into the levels of educational achievement attained by different ethnic groups.

Mr. Robin Squire: Research evidence is already available on the levels of educational achievement attained by different ethnic groups. The reasons why some groups achieve better than others were examined in detail by the former Swann committee of inquiry into the education of children from ethnic minority groups. Lord Swann concluded that there would be little to be gained in studying the causes further and that the focus should now be on efforts to counter underachievement. The Government have been doing this, through a variety of measures to raise the educational achievement of all pupils, whatever their ethnic background.

Special Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of statutory age pupils attended a special school in each local education authority; and what was the national average, for the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Forth: The percentage of pupils aged five to 15 attending maintained special schools in England in January 1993 was 1·31 per cent.

Information on attendance at maintained special schools in each local authority in England is given in the table.

ENVIRONMENT

Habitats Directive

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be laying the draft regulations for the implementation of the EC habitats directive before the House.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the Government's detailed response to the EU habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are firmly committed to the transportation of the directive into United Kingdom law. I expect to lay draft regulations under the affirmative procedure before the House shortly.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of local authority capital receipts from council house sales set aside as provision to meet credit liabilities.

Mr. Baldry: Returns from local authorities indicate that the total amounts set aside as provision to meet credit liabilities at 31 March 1993 was £6·2 billion. No figures are available within this total for the amounts set aside from capital receipts arising from the sale of council houses.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been (a) the total number of council house sales and (b) the number as a percentage of stocks in each district council area for the period since 1980.

Sir George Young: A table showing the available information on the total number of council dwelling sales in each English local authority for every financial year since 1979-80 and a cumulative total to December 1993 is in the Library. The table also gives data on the cumulative total of sales expressed as a percentage of the estimated stock at 1 April 1979.

Ponds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider carrying out a survey into the desirability of pond preservation orders, similar to tree preservation orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Results from a special analysis of the countryside survey 1990 on ponds are expected shortly. Environmental schemes, such as countryside stewardship, protect environmental features including ponds and encourage their creation. Against this background I have no plans to introduce specific statutory protection for ponds.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the relationship between the new index of local conditions and the Z score of deprivation as used by his Department to distribute resources to local government;

(2) what plans he has to change the resource distribution methodologies to reflect the deprivation of Birmingham as measured by the index of local conditions.

Mr. Baldry: The index of local conditions and its predecessor based on Z scores are not used to determine resource distribution. The index is one of the factors which Government offices of the regions may take into account in assessing bids for funding through the single regeneration budget. There are no plans to include the index of local conditions in the standard spending assessment system used to distribute revenue support grant. As well as many other indicators reflecting higher spending need, the SSA system already includes economic and social indices.

Local Government Review

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the cost of the local government review to local government.

Mr. Baldry: We have no estimates for the expenditure incurred by local authorities on the local government review.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate Ordnance Survey has made of the costs of revising maps to show new local authority boundaries resulting from the current local government review.

Mr. Baldry: The provisional estimate is for a cost between £1·5 million and £3·5 million. Ordnance Survey will make a more precise estimate when results of the local government review are known.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the costs to date and estimated future costs of (a) the Local Government Commission, (b) the Staff Commission and (c) the Audit Commission in relation to the local government review.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission incurred expenditure of £2·056 million in 1992-93 and received grant in aid of £5·124 million in 1993-94. We are making available £8·300 million to fund the Commission's activities in 1994-95, and have announced provision of £2·500 million and £1·500 million for the years 1995-96 and 1996-97.

The Local Government Staff Commission (England) incurred expenditure of £270,692 in 1993-94. We are making available £363,000 to the staff commission in 1994-95, and intend to make available £374,000 in 1995-96, and £386,000 in both 1996-97 and 1997-98.

Where the Local Government Commission invited the Audit Commission's views on proposals for reorganisation, its costs were reimbursed. The Audit Commission has also produced a consultation paper on local government reorganisation—"Time for Change"—at a cost of £46,603. Future work and associated costs will be determined by the response to that consultation paper.

River Water Quality

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received regarding river water pollution from mining or former mining works in each region in England during the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In the past year, some 60 representations have been received expressing concern specifically about potential or actual mine water pollution in the National Rivers Authority's Northumbria and Yorkshire region; eight in the Severn-Trent region, two in the North West region and five in the South Western region. In addition there have been some 20 general representations.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes have taken place in each of the last 10 years in river water quality in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The relevant five-year river quality surveys for 1985 and 1990 are available in the House Library. The most recent report on river quality by the National Rivers Authority, published in May 1994, shows a significant improvement in the north-west, with the proportion of good quality rivers increasing from 42 per cent. to 53 per cent. between 1990 and 1992, and the proportion of poor or bad quality rivers declining from 27 per cent. to 19 per cent.

Road Crossing Facilities

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make additional financial resources available for the provision of road crossing facilities for (a) the visually disabled and (b) other disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Resources for revenue spending by local authorities on the provision of road crossing facilities for the disabled are included within their standard spending assessment for highway maintenance. Provisional decisions on the highway maintenance standard spending assessment for 1995-96 will be announced shortly after the Budget as part of the proposed local authority finance settlement.

Local authorities may also include the provision of such facilities within their annual transport policy programmes which receive funding from the Department of Transport.

The provision of road crossing facilities for the disabled is at the discretion of individual local authorities, which are best placed to decide on the level of provision taking account of local circumstances and their own spending priorities.

Wildlife

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 879-80, how many more nature conservation orders he has granted or refused under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in England; how many are still in force; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 576, how many further prosecutions have been taken under sections 28 or 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Since 31 December 1993, one new nature conservation order has been made and three orders have been revoked. There are now 16 orders in force.

There have been no further prosecutions under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, and one under section 29.

Departmental Housing

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will publish the report of the empty homes task group.

Sir George Young: We intend to publish shortly the report of the task force on Government Departments' empty houses, along with a Government response to its recommendations.

Medway Special Protection Area

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons Her Majesty's Government excluded Lappel bank from the Medway special protection area.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend's reasons for excluding Lappel bank from the Medway special protection area are set out in my officials' letter of 10 December 1993 to the chief executive, English Nature, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Water Meters

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has agreed that the Director General of Water Services should be able to make it a condition that water companies intending to expand their system should be required to extend also the installation of meters.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services, the NRA and water companies. When expanding their systems, water companies are expected to assess the relative merits of demand management measures, such as metering or leakage control as compared with resource development. I understand that all but five water companies have a policy of metering water supplies for new connections.

Coal Extraction

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies he proposes to include in revised planning guidance for coal extraction in the light of responses to the public consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies he proposes to include in revised planning guidance for coal extraction in the light of responses to public consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The draft guidance that we published in December last year provides a stronger environmental framework than the guidance published in 1988. The Government believe that the planning framework for coal extraction should be based on the same general principles as for other mineral extraction. To avoid any misunderstanding, we have decided to delete the statement in the draft guidance that "it would be against the national interest to refuse permission for coal extraction". It is clear from the responses to consultation that the reference to "the national interest" in paragraph 15 of the draft guidance has been wrongly interpreted as giving an extra presumption in favour of coal mining development.

The Government wish to see the development of the largest economically viable coal industry for the longer term within its broad objectives of encouraging competition, promoting economic growth and assisting the creation and maintenance of employment. This must, of course, be consistent with land use planning criteria, and the best way of striking the balance between the economic importance of this indigenous energy resource and the protection of the environment is through the careful consideration of individual applications within the framework of the development plan-led system.

The Government's policy is that, where the development can be carried out in an environmentally acceptable way and consistent with the principles of sustainable development, there is no case, in land use planning terms, for placing more restrictions on coal extraction and colliery spoil disposal than are necessary to ensure full and proper protection of the environment.

We hope to publish final guidance before the summer recess to provide a planning framework which will ensure that the industry can develop the mineral resource in a way that has proper regard to local concerns and is fully compatible with economic growth, the protection of the environment and the principles of sustainable development. I am confident that with careful planning and a sensitive approach to local concerns the industry will be able to come forward with proposals that contribute to economic growth and which provide an environmentally sound foundation for the future.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if education projects with particular reference to the teaching of English to children of New Commonwealth origin are eligible as bids under the single regeneration budget; for how many such bids he has made provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The single regeneration budget encourages local partnerships to come forward with bids that reflect the needs of their areas and which meet the SRB objectives. These objectives embrace proposals which "promote initiatives of benefit to ethnic minorities" and which "enhance the employment prospects, education and skills of local people, particularly the young and those at a disadvantage, and promote equality of opportunity". It is for local partnerships to decide what their local priorities are and to say how these fit within the strategic approach to regeneration which the SRB bidding guidance requires.

On present estimates some £100 million will be available nationally in 1995-96 to support new local bids.

DEFENCE

Al Yamamah Agreements

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library tables showing the value of orders placed with British industry each year under (a) the Al Yamamah I intergovernmental agreement and (b) Al Yamamah II intergovernmental agreement valued in cash in US dollars and sterling with the exchange rate used for translation; and if he will estimate the value of sub-contracts on such orders placed outside Britain.

Mr. Aitken: No. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on detailed matters concerning individual defence export sales.

Ballistic Missile Defence

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of the pre-feasibility study contract on ballistic missile def nce; how many bids he has received; from whom; and when he expects to announce the award of the contract.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom ballistic missile defence pre-feasibility study is the subject of a competitive tendering exercise. Tenders were received on 23 June 1994 from two consortia led by British Aerospace plc and Logica UK Ltd. The two tenders are being assessed against the invitation to tender. It is intended that the contract award will be announced in the autumn.

Search and Rescue Services

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what comparison he has made of the cost of basing search and rescue at RAF Brawdy and RAF Chivenor following the decision to mothball Chivenor and base 14 Signals Regiment at Brawdy.

Mr. Hanley: All factors, particularly the operational case but also the financial arguments, were taken into account in reaching our decision to transfer the SAR flight from RAF Brawdy to RAF Chivenor. I have no plans to conduct any further financial appraisal of this matter following my recent decision to base 14 Signals Regiment at Brawdy; my Department is currently considering alternative defence uses for RAF Chivenor.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for independent expert advice to be given to the Ministry of Defence on the care of historic buildings which it owns or occupies.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence takes seriously the Government's commitment to aim for the highest standards of conservation for its historic buildings. To assist in achieving that aim, my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence has appointed a historic buildings advisory group.

The terms of reference of the group are that—

> It will assist my Department to manage the historic buildings on its estate by providing a source of informed advice on the care and maintenance of buildings, adaptation for new uses and disposal.
> It will offer expert advice on idividual buildings or groups of buildings, and their setting, and on any associated archaeological aspects as appropriate. Members of the group will provide a link to outside experts and specialists as necessary.
> It will provide advice on the development of my Department's general policy and strategy with a view to establishing priorities in allocating limited resources, and to devising disposal strategies for large or difficult sites. It will thus contribute to the effective management within the available resources of the Department's historic estate, in line with the Government's aim to achieve the highest standards of conservation.

My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will chair this group whenever possible; otherwise the vice-chairman, Sir William Whitfield, CBE, will lead. Other outside members of the group are

Mr. Alan Baxter
Mr. Stuart Lipton
Mr. Ian McIvor
Mr. Les Sparks

In addition, Mr. John Ledlie, a deputy under-secretary in my Department, is a member of the group.

Army Technical Branches

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the organisation of the Army's technical branches and authorities.

Mr. Hanley: A review has been completed into the organisation and grouping of the Army's technical branches and authorities. The review reported its initial findings in August 1992.

One of the recommendations of the review was that the spares divisions located at Chilwell and Donnington should be amalgamated into one division operating from a single site, with ensuing economies of scale. This recommendation has now been subjected to operational and financial appraisals. The most cost-effective solution which has emerged is that the two provisioning and procurement divisions, the vehicle spares division Chilwell and technical equipments division Donnington, should be collocated within a rented building in Telford, near Donnington, achieving savings of some £6,000,000 per annum. I have decided to accept this recommendation as the basis for consultation with the trades unions and other interested parties. Final decisions will only be taken in the light of representations made.

I am placing a copy of the consultation document in the Library of the House.

Small Arms Ammunition

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on future orders for small arms ammunition.

Mr. Aitken: A long-term contract was won by Royal Ordnance plc last October for the supply of various types of ammunition, including small arms ammunition, during the period 1993-94 to 1997-98. The contract included an option to extend all or part of the contract for a further two years. We have now reached an agreement with Royal Ordnance to extend the small arms element of the contract to cover the years 1998 to 1999 and 1999 to 2000. This increases the value of the contract to Royal Ordnance by some £40 million and should help maintain jobs at Royal Ordnance's Radway Green factory which employs nearly 600 people.

Operation Granby

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific assessments have been made by his Department, the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, or by the United States Defence Department with his knowledge, of the possibility that some of the Iraqi targets bombed during Operation Granby released chemical warfare agents into the environment that may have contaminated British service men and women.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 24 June 1994]: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, CBDE, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 24 June 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what specific assessments have been made by his Department, the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, or by the United States Defense Department with his knowledge, of the possibility that some of the Iraqi targets bombed during Operation GRANBY released chemical warfare agents into the environment that may have contaminated British servicemen and women has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. During Operation GRANBY, the potential hazard to Service personnel resulting from the bombing of Iraqi targets at which chemical weapons were stored was recognised by the Ministry of Defence. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment made an assessment of the potential downwind hazard distances based on various assumptions for the quantity of agent that might be released as a result of a bombing attack and for the associated meteorological conditions.

3. The result of the assessment indicated that even assuming simultaneous release of the majority of agent from several bunkers under meteorological conditions which favoured the downwind travel of the agent cloud and ignoring the fact that chemical agents are organic materials which are destroyed by combustion, the maximum distance at which there would be any hazard was of the order of a few tens of kilometres. In practice, simultaneous release is unlikely to occur, agent will be destroyed by combustion and meteorological conditions will be less favourable resulting in a significantly reduced downwind hazard distance.

4. The conclusion was that there was no evidence that British Servicemen and women would be exposed to chemical warfare agent as a result of bombing attacks. Our appreciation is that the US Department of Defense carried out similar studies and reached similar conclusions.

SCOTLAND

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount charged to council tax payers for water and sewerage charges in each of the regional and island councils of Scotland in 1994-95.

Sir Hector Monro: Households receiving a public water supply pay council water charges levied along with their council tax. Sewerage is one of the services funded from within council tax. Details of council water charges and expenditure on sewerage are given in the leaflet recently issued to households in Scotland. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what effect the proposed local government reorganisation will have on the amount of revenue and capital grant paid to the proposed water boards.

Sir Hector Monro: The present grant system applicable to local authorities will not apply to the new water and sewerage authorities. Their arrangements will be determined by a new financial control regime. Provision is made in the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill for grants to be made to the new water and sewerage authorities under clause 83.

Wildcats

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences have been issued for the killing or taking of wildcats in each of the past five years.

Sir Hector Monro: One licence was issued for the taking of wildcats in 1989. In 1990 and 1991 no licences were issued, but in 1992 two were issued to take the species followed by a further such licence in 1993.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by county the amount of European Union arable subsidy received for the latest year for which figures are available; and what were the figures for each of the previous four years.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 462-63. The arable area payments scheme was introduced in 1992 and the first payments were made in 1993. There are therefore no comparable figures for previous years.

Gaelic-medium Education

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the future of funding arrangements for Gaelic-medium education;

(2) if he will initiate a strategy aimed at ensuring the continuation of Gaelic-medium education into secondary schools;

(3) how many responses he has received to Her Majesty's inspectors' report on Gaelic education; and if he will place a summary of the responses in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office Education Department has received 123 responses to Her Majesty's inspectorate report "Provision for Gaelic Education in Scotland". These are currently being analysed and summarised, and a copy of the summary will be placed in the Library in due course.

We intend to take account of the inspectorate report and the comments which have been received on it in formulating future policy for Gaelic education, on which I will make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children are now receiving Gaelic-medium education in primary schools, by local authority areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The 1993 school census showed that 1,144 primary school pupils were receiving Gaelic medium cross-curricular instruction. This figure is broken down by local authority areas as follows:-

Local Authority Area	Number of Pupils
Highland	414
Strathclyde	398
Western Isles	309
Grampian	17
Tayside	6
Total	1,144

This figure excludes primary school pupils receiving bilingual Gaelic/English instruction or other Gaelic instruction.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to safeguard the place of Gaelic-medium education following the reorganisation of local government.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I see no risk to Gaelic education arising out of local government reorganisation, as the new authorities will have the same responsibilities as the old. The Scottish Office Education Department will issue guidance to education authorities after the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill receives Royal Assent.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: A full reply could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 21 February 1994 Official Report, columns 51-52, and to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 16 March 1994, Official Report, columns 659-60 which contain much of the information sought.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if consultation on the future of the Forestry Commission will take place on the full range of options considered by the working group;

(2) if he will make a statement on the timetable for consultation on the future of the Forestry Commission and on the method of consultation.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 May 1994, Official Report, column 48.

Tourism

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to launch additional initiatives to promote Scotland in the tourist market as the home of golf; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The statutory agency with responsibility for the promotion of Scotland as a tourist destination is the Scottish tourist board. The board recognises that golf is an important attraction to potential visitors to Scotland and features it prominently in its promotional activities both within the United Kingdom and overseas. Promotional initiatives are an operational matter for the board and I have therefore arranged for its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Glenfeshie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what weight he has attached in his consideration of Glenfeshie to policies of planting set-aside areas with trees nearer to sawmills than the south Cairngorms.

Sir Hector Monro: Glenfeshie is a private estate, and thus tree planting on the estate is a matter for its owner.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his assessment of the value of Glenfeshie and Mar Lodge as attractions for tourism in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: As the Glenfeshie and Mar Lodge estates are privately owned, my right hon. Friend has made no specific assessment of their value to tourism. However, the principal attraction of the Cairngorms area for tourists is the high quality of its landscape and natural heritage. These attractions are well represented in the Glenfeshie and Mar Lodge estates. In recognition of the national importance of the landscape and natural heritage which they contain, significant parts of these estates have been included in the Cairngorms national nature reserve, the Cairngorms national scenic area, and the proposed Cairngorms special protection area.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the conservation areas in Scotland which are subject to article 4 of the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Scotland) Order 1992 directive by his Department.

Mr. Allan Stewart: A comprehensive list is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

GPs (Night Visits)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 15 June, Official Report, columns 605-6, what is his assessment of the reasons for the upward growth in the figures for night visits by general practitioners.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 June 1994]: The rising trend is likely to reflect a range of factors but the step increase in 1990-91 can probably be attributed largely to changes introduced by the 1990 GP contract to the basis on which GPs are remunerated for night visits, including a two-tier system of payment for night visits and a two-hour extension of the period within which visits gave rise to eligibility for a fee.

Conveyancing and Executry Services Board

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made a decision about the future of the Conveyancing and Executry Services Board; and what consultations he undertook before reaching his conclusions.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 June 1994]: My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State announced on 21 June that the suspension of the Scottish Conveyancing and Executry Services Board would continue for a further two years. After careful consideration, we had concluded that the housing market had not yet picked up sufficiently to provide worthwhile opportunities for qualified conveyancers. The decision will be reviewed in a year's time.

No formal consultation exercise was undertaken in reaching this decision. We did, however, take into account the representations we had received over the period since the board was suspended.

Public Information

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the names and addresses of those contracted to provide one-stop access to information on behalf of his Department under the taking stock exercise, (b) the estimated annual amount to each including expenses, (c) how many inquiries have been made up to and including 1 June at each office and (d) the pro rata cost of each inquiry; and if he will make a statement on what has been achieved by this project.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1994]: Of the 25 public information points established since September 1993, 20 are in departmental offices around Scotland, three are in citizens advice bureaux in Dumbarton, Airdrie and Kirkcaldy, and two are in the offices of solicitors in Perth and Kirkcudbright—at June 1994. The total cost of establishing all 25 information points is approximately £27,000 covering racking, shelving, the provision of a telephone helpline, and printed material. No payments have been made to the firms in whose offices information points have been established. A record of the number of inquirers calling at the information points is not kept, and consequently it is not possible to calculate a cost per inquiry. Information points make an important contribution to the accessibility of the Scottish Office and allow members of the public to inquire, complain or make suggestions about the Department's services and policies.

Johnstone Health Clinic

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the utilisation or disposal of the former Johnstone health clinic, which was closed when Argyll and Clyde health board opened the new Johnstone health centre.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 June 1994]: I understand that this property is currently being considered for use as a centre for day care for adults with learning disabilities. The project sponsors—Argyll and Clyde health board, Strathclyde regional council, and Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust—expect to make a decision during the summer.

Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number and total cost of merit awards currently made to consultants for each health authority in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The information is shown in the table:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list for each of the last five years, the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to her Department; and if she will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: The table gives the aggregate cost of contracts with each of the 11 named consultants for the years 1990-91 to 1993-94. Details for 1989-90 are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The final item in the table gives the total cost of other consultants employed by the Department for the same years. Lists of those consultants for the years in question appear after the table. The figures are presented in this aggregated form because showing the figures for each year would reveal the cost of some individual contracts and so breach commercial confidentiality. The figures exclude contracts with MAFF agencies.

Arable Subsidy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list by county the amount of European Union arable subsidy received for the latest year for which figures are available; and what were the figures (a) 12 months, (b) 24 months, (c) 36 months and (d) 48 months ago.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend on 20 June 1994, Official Report, column 34. The arable area payments scheme was introduced in 1992 and the first payments were made in 1993. There are therefore no comparable figures for previous years.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out her reasons for not renewing this year the invitation to the Transport and General Workers Union to nominate representatives to the consultative panel on badgers and bovine tuberculosis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Transport and General Workers Union was not invited to re-nominate a representative to the consultative panel on badgers and bovine tuberculosis this year because, following a review of membership, I decided that only those organisations with a clear and direct concern in the problem needed to be represented.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations are currently invited to nominate representatives to the consultative panel of badgers and bovine tuberculosis; and which organisations were invited to nominate representatives to the panel in the previous round of nominations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The organisations currently invited to nominate representatives to the consultative panel on badgers and bovine tuberculosis are:

British Veterinary Association
Country Landowners Association
Fauna and Flora Preservation Society
Joint Nature Conservation Committee
Mammal Society
National Cattle Breeders Association
National Farmers' Union
National Federation of Badger Groups
Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals
Royal Society For Nature Conservation
Tenant Farmers' Association
Universities Federation for Animal Welfare
Womens' Farming Union

In addition, there is an independent chairman and three independent members.

The organisation invited to nominate representatives to the panel in the previous round of nominations were:

British Veterinary Association
Country Landowners Association
Fauna and Flora Preservation Society
Joint Nature Conservation Committee
Mammal Society
National Farmers' Union
National Federation of Badger Groups
Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals
Royal Society For Nature Conservation
Transport and General Workers' Union
Universities Federation for Animal Welfare

In addition there was an independent chairman and four independent members.

Nutrition

Ms Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the mean consumption of the nutrient intakes of (a) energy, (b) fat (c) total sugars, (d) calcium, (e) iron, (f) carotene, (g) vitamins A, C, D and E, (h) potassium, (i) magnesium and (j) iron for (i) men and (ii) women aged 16 to 64 years in (1) social classes I and II (combined) and (2) social classes IV and V (combined); and what these figures are as a percentage of (x) the mean for the population for the population as a whole, (y) the reference nutrition Intake and (z) the lower reference nutrient Intake, in accordance with figures 5.2, 5.4, 5.14, 5.20, 5.22, 5.24, 5.26, 5.28 and 5.30 of the 1994 Report of the 1986-87 dietary and nutritional survey of British adults.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is given in the table.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decisions her Department has taken in respect of TECs over the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement on her Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. Jack: Responsibility for training and enterprise councils lies primarily with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

We attach importance to the provision of education and training for the land-based industries. MAFF takes a keen interest in ensuring that the agricultural and horticultural industries have access to the best resources available to train their work forces. To that end, MAFF has been instrumental in providing resources to the industry training organisation for agriculture and commercial horticulture, ATB-Landbase Ltd., and in helping to ensure that those organisations, such as the TECs, which guide and provide training and education of direct interest to the land-based industries, are aware of the training needs of businesses in the rural economy.

Over the last year, the Ministry has developed its contacts with several TECs on a regional basis. We have discussed how rural initiatives can be developed in partnership with businesses and training providers, and how the available resources can best be targeted to meet the training needs of the industry. Visits by Ministers to TECs are a feature of their regional programmes. MAFF and the consortium of rural TECs are members of the national rural education and training strategy whose aim is to contribute to the development of the rural education and training infrastructure. NRETS is currently considering how existing training and education mechanisms are meeting the changing needs of the land-based industries and we look forward to its advice.

Fish Marketing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will introduce a marketing development scheme for fisheries similar to those under the Agriculture Act 1993.

Mr. Jack: The establishment of a marketing development scheme for fishery products similar to that already adopted under the Agriculture Act 1993 would not be in accordance with the EU rules on state aids in the fisheries sector. These rules are currently under review in Brussels, but it remains to be seen whether the Union will decide to change them in this respect.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 169, which interested parties he intends to consult regarding the future of the state veterinary service.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend intends to consult very widely, and would welcome the views of any interested person or body.

Integrated Administration and Control

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her estimate of the proportion of eligible farm holdings, which submitted admissible integrated administration and control scheme documentation by the closing date in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jack: At the time of distributing the IACS forms we could not predict how many forms would be returned in an admissible state.

We were able to accept 155,977 applications as having been lodged with United Kingdom Agriculture Departments by the 15 May deadline; of these 81,863 were received in England, 20,329 in Wales, 25,416 in Scotland and 28,369 in Northern Ireland. An application may relate to more than one farm holding. Departments are still carrying out detailed checks to determine eligibility for payment of these applications.

WALES

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each district council area in Wales and for Wales as a whole the number of neighbourhood watch schemes in operation as at 31 December 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held in the form requested. It is collated at police force level, and the available information is as follows:

Police Force	Total at 31 December 1993
Dyfed-Powys Police	1,257
Gwent Police	210
North Wales Police	2,989
South Wales Police	1,292
TOTAL	5,748

Temporary Jobs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many temporary jobs were available in jobcentres in the week ended 28 May in each Welsh travel-to-work area and in total in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information on vacancies for temporary jobs is available only on a quarterly basis. During the period 10 January 1994 to 8 April 1994 the number of vacancies for temporary jobs notified to jobcentres in Wales was 10,400. Information is not available for travel-to-work areas.

Road Safety Education

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will issue guidelines to all initial teacher training colleges recommending that they include road safety education on all PGCE and B.Ed. courses;

(2) if he will make it his policy to provide a specific allocation of financial resources for the training of teachers in road safety education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The Government set out the criteria which all courses of initial teacher training must meet, focusing on the subject knowledge and teaching skills new teachers require to be effective in the classroom. It is for the initial teacher training institutions to decide on the inclusion of cross-curricular elements such as road safety education in the courses they provide.

The funding made available to initial teacher training providers by the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales and through tuition fees is intended to reflect the costs of all aspects of the training courses and it would be inappropriate to make special provision for road safety education which is an optional element of these courses.

Separately, the Department provides funding to the British Institute of Traffic Education Research to provide the services of the Traffic Education Officer for Wales. Among other things, the duties of this officer involve advising on the handling of road user education in schools and organising seminars for student teachers.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to (a) place a general duty upon all schools to provide road safety education and (b) include child casualty reduction as a stated aim in their programmes of preventive health and safety education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are opportunities within the framework of the national curriculum for road safety education. It is for local education authorities and schools to determine the organisation of any such education and whether it should be delivered in the context of individual national curriculum subjects or as part of a cross-curricular programme.

The Government's strategy for reducing road accidents involving children is set out in the document "Children and Roads: A Safer Way", a copy of which is in the Library of the House and which includes a section on road safety education in schools. Road safety officers in individual authorities provide advice to schools and a range of teaching materials is available.

The Welsh Office provides funding for the services of the traffic education officer for Wales who advises on the handling of road user education in schools and organises seminars for student teachers.

Arable Subsidies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county the amount of European Union arable subsidy received for the latest year for which figures are available; and what were the figures for each of the previous four years.

Mr. Redwood: The arable area payments scheme was introduced in 1992 and the first payments were made in 1993. There are therefore no comparable figures for previous years. Payments made since 1993 to date are as follows:

	Simplified scheme	Main scheme
County	£	Cereals £	Oilseeds £	Protein £	Set-aside £	Total £
Clwyd	410,500	201,003	92,365	50,903	87,646	842,417

TOTAL	2,461,994	1,569,957	568,339	241,770	613,531	5,455,591

Law Students

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students studying for a law degree in the University of Wales failed to secure legal traineeship in each year since (a) 1991-92, (b) 1992-93 and (c) 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decisions his Department has taken in respect of training and enterprise councils over the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the last 12 months my right hon. Friend has provided strategic and planning guidance to TECs; officials have negotiated contracts based on assessments of TECs' corporate and business plans and in the light of the resources available; and TEC performance has been monitored and reviewed. Throughout the year decisions were taken in the context of the TEC operating agreement and variations to business plans made as appropriate.

Student Employment (Summer Vacation)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support he proposes to help Welsh students who fail to find employment during the summer vacation and whose parents are unable to support them; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Student support arrangements through the mandatory grant and loan make more resources available to students than through grant alone. The student loan is intended to cover the whole of the academic year including the summer vacation period. In addition, further and higher education institutions in Wales receive access funds to provide discretionary help to students in particular financial need. Access funds totalling £1·262 million for the current academic year were distributed by the Welsh funding councils to FHE institutions in Wales.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applicants for section 4 grants were made by tourism operators in Wales in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested on the number of section 4 applications is as follows:

	Total applications
1990	210
1991	316
1992	646
1993	467

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total value of section 4 grants made to tourism operators in Wales in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested on the value of section 4 grants is as follows:

	Total value approved (£)
1990	3,838,409
1991	3,159,654
1992	4,845,233
1993	5,138,717

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many section 4 grants have been allocated to those involved in tourism services in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested on the number of section 4 grants made is as follows:

	Total approved
1990	163
1991	169
1992	488
1993	426

Pollution

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prosecutions have been brought against farmers for alleged pollution incidents in Wales in (a) 1991, (b) 1992, (c) 1993 and (d) in the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally. Information on numbers of prosecutions brought by the National Rivers Authority in its Welsh region following farm water pollution incidents is contained in the authority's annual reports on "Water Pollution Incidents in England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many companies in Wales were taken to court for polluting the environment in 1993; how many of them were successfully prosecuted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution prosecuted three companies in 1993. All three prosecutions were successful.

Information about prosecutions undertaken by the National Rivers Authority is included in its annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Details of prosecution actions by local authorities are not held centrally.

Infertility, Gwent

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if Gwent health authority has sought from his Department advice as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Advanced Technology Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the effects of cuts in the advanced technology programme in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The effects of cuts will be minimal in Wales.

Transport Planning Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will issue a document on transport planning policy guidance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend is currently reviewing planning policy guidance note 13, "Highways Considerations in Development Control", and revised guidance will issue in due course.

Warner Report

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of Dr. Morton Warner's report for the Welsh Health Planning Forum on the future supply and demand for hospital beds and other medical facilities in Wales, with particular reference to Powys and Neath.

Mr. Redwood: Copies of the Welsh Health Planning Forum document "Health and Social Care 2010" have been placed in the Library of the House. Policy for the NHS Wales is to provide the number of beds needed to fulfil the promises of the patients charter.

NHS Trusts (Job Losses)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received from national health service trusts about their estimates for job losses (a) up to the end of the current financial year and (b) in the next financial year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no requirement for NHS trusts to inform the Welsh Office of any changes in the numbers of employees.

Local Government (Wales) Bill

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the Minister of State's oral statement of 16 June, Official Report, column 773, giving the final date on which instructions were given to parliamentary counsel for drafting amendments to clause 44 of the Local Government (Wales) Bill [Lords], on what previous occasions his Department instructed parliamentary counsel in relation to the amendments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Details of such exchanges between Government Departments are not normally divulged.

Social Services

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for developing the inspection of social services in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [pursuant to his reply, 23 June 1994, Official Report, c. 274-75]: I regret that an incomplete answer was given. A full reply is as follows:

In June 1993, I published a consultation document "Inspecting Social Services in Wales". This set out proposals for applying three key principles of the citizens charter—that inspectors should be independent of the services they inspect, that lay people should be involved in inspections, and that inspection reports should be accessible to the public.

I intend that during 1994 there should be clear and demonstrable progress, both nationally and locally, towards the wider implementation of the citizens charter principles.

The social services inspectorate for Wales has already made considerable progress. For some years its inspection reports have been available to the public. A small group is being established to advise on the social services inspectorate's inspection work; half its membership will represent service users, carers and wider lay interests, and half will be drawn from local authorities and providers of services in the independent sector. Since February 1994, inspection teams have begun to include lay assessors; inspection reports will take full account of their views and observations.

I propose to issue shortly, for a brief consultation, draft guidance on how the same principles should be applied to the work of "arm's-length" inspection units in local authority social services departments.

The new guidance will give local authority chief executives the important role of commissioning independent annual reports on the work of inspection units. These reports will focus on whether units apply the same standards to both local authority and independent provision, and on how effectively local authorities respond when improvements are shown to be needed.

The guidance will call for a change in the composition of advisory committees for inspection units. By the end of 1994 the number of lay people unconnected with the authority should be increased so that they form a majority on advisory committees.

I intend, too, that during 1994 we will begin to see lay people involved in social services inspections, and their views reflected in inspection reports. It will not be possible to include lay people in every inspection, but there must be substantial lay involvement on a regular and continuing basis.

The consultation document restated the Government's commitment to open reporting. I have been greatly encouraged to see that most county councils in Wales are already making inspection reports publicly available. I intend that by the end of 1994 this should be normal practice for all authorities.

This requirement for open reporting will cover joint inspections by local authorities and health authorities of premises dually registered as both residential care homes and nursing homes. I believe that progress towards joint working will be further helped if both sectors are working to the same citizens charter principles. I shall be consulting health authorities, nursing home associations and others about how this can best be done.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of total budget in each Welsh district health authority and trust was spent on (a) managerial, (b) administrative and (c) clerical costs in each year since 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The percentages of total expenditure by each district health authority and national health service trust in Wales accounted for by spending on managerial, administrative and clerical costs in 1991-92 and 1992-93 were as follows:

House Burglaries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many house burglaries were reported in Wales and for each county in Wales for the year 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The table shows the number of domestic burglaries recorded in each police force in Wales in 1993. The information is not available centrally for counties and 1994 data are not yet available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the response of the United Nations to Tanzania's proposed withdrawal from the peacekeeping operation in Liberia; and what reason was given by Tanzania for this withdrawal.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Tanzania has not made a definite decision to withdraw from the ECOMOG peacekeeping force in Liberia. The United Nations is in negotiation with the Tanzanians to solve problems which have arisen with logistic support for the Tanzanian battalion.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to strengthen mines protocol No. 11 to the 1981 inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A review conference on the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention has been called for 1995, the main aim of which will be to consider strengthening protocol II on the use of land mines. We are already playing a full role in the preparations for that conference.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy and rationale with regard to the ratification of the 1980 inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom has signed the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention, and we are now working actively towards ratification. We hope to achieve this soon, certainly in time for the review conference in 1995.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is seeking to extend the 1980 inhumane weapons convention to cover internal conflicts.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The application of the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention to non-international conflicts is one of the issues being considered by the expert groups preparing for the review conference on the convention in 1995. We are playing a full role in this process.

South Lebanon

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances the Israeli Government have given him about their intentions for South Lebanon and on the time scale and diplomatic procedures for the fulfilment of those intentions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received assurances from Prime Minister Rabin that Israel recognises its international border with Lebanon and has no territorial claim on Lebanese territory.

On 18 April, in a speech to the Knesset, Prime Minister Rabin proposed that, "In the first phase, the Lebanese army be deployed up to the Northern border of the security zone. For six months, it must prove its ability to maintain total calm and to disarm Hizbullah in Southern Lebanon. If this is proven and total quiet reigns on the Northern border of the security zone, we will begin peace negotiations that I hope will last three months. We will be prepared to withdraw to the International border between Lebanon and Israel on three conditions: Full peace and normalisation; appropriate security arrangements; and, of course, our commitments to the Southern Lebanese Army and the residents of Southern Lebanon, the integration of the South Lebanese Army within the Lebanese army and a guarantee to residents of Southern Lebanon that they will not be harmed."

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Israel gave undertakings to withdraw from South Lebanon before he lifted the arms embargo on Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prime Minister Rabin has given my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs assurances that Israel recognises its international border with Lebanon and has no territorial claim on Lebanese territory.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's involvement with TECs.

Mr. Goodlad: My Department has in the past received help with our new entrant training programme for technical staff. A redundancy task force is now providing assistance in the design of a redundancy package; and the TECs have provided information and presentations on national vocational qualifications and Investors in People.

Bosnia

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to funding the restoration of Bosnia-Herzegovina's historic monuments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have taken the lead in the international effort to restore Sarajevo library, and have made a substantial contribution to restocking books. We are considering together with the international community the broader general need for reconstruction once there is a lasting peace settlement.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when instructions for entitlement to free entry clearance were sent to all the relevant posts: and if he will deposit in the Library a copy of the instructions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The payment, or waiver, of consular fees, which include fees for entry clearances, is regulated by the Consular Fees Act 1980 and the Consular Fees Orders, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Their texts are included in "Diplomatic Service Procedure", which is issued to all missions overseas.

Peacekeeping Operations

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the commitments the UN Security Council has made to peacekeeping operations in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994 to the latest date; what are the total estimated expenditure on each of these commitments; and what the estimated United Kingdom contribution is to each of them.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following figures are taken from the UN status of contribution reports, as at 30 April 1994:

Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the documents submitted to the Foreign Affairs Council in Corfu on the European Union policy position on the Korean nuclear problem.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the European Council meeting in Corfu, Heads of Government expressed their deep concern at North Korea's continued failure to comply with its safeguards agreement, and their hope that exchanges currently being pursued would rapidly result in a satisfactory solution to the crisis. A copy of the presidency's conclusions has been placed in the Library of the House.

Czech Republic

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relationship with the Czech Republic; what ministerial visits have taken place to the Czech Republic in the past 12 months; and what official Czech visits have been made to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's relations with the Czech Republic are close and cordial.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited Prague on 5 to 6 May. Four other British Ministers have paid visits to the Czech Republic within the last 12 months. During the same period, President Havel, Prime Minister Klaus and eight Czech Ministers or deputy Ministers have visited the United Kingdom.

Hong Kong

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government plan to take to facilitate the extension to Hong Kong of the United Nations convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

Mr. Goodlad: As extending the convention to Hong Kong involves assuming new international obligations in respect of Hong Kong, we will shortly be consulting the Chinese side in the joint liaison group, so that it can continue to apply to Hong Kong after 30 June 1997. In the meantime, the Hong Kong Government are preparing legislation to prohibit sex discrimination and to set up an equal opportunities commission to promote gender equality.

Japan

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his Japanese counterpart following the statement by the Japanese Prime Minister to the Japanese Diet on 17 June that Japan has the capacity to make nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made no representations to, nor have we communicated with, the Japanese Prime Minister with regard to his comment of 17 June. As a non-nuclear weapon state party to the non-proliferation treaty, Japan has given a legally binding commitment not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons. In accordance with the NPT, Japan has also concluded a fullscope safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. We have no reason to doubt the commitment of the Japanese Government to the principles of the treaty.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to (a) raise with his Russian and American counterparts and (b) to instruct the British ambassador to the United Nations to raise with his counterparts as representing the other depositary states for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty the statement by the Japanese Prime Minister to the Japanese Diet on 17 June that Japan has the capacity to build nuclear weapons, in regard to Japan's commitments under the NPT.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a non-nuclear weapon state party to the non-proliferation treaty, Japan has given a legally binding commitment not to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons. Japan has also concluded a fullscope safeguards agreement with the IAEA. We have no reason to doubt the commitment of the Japanese Government to the principles of the treaty.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the former Prime Minister of Sudan, Sadiq al-Mahdi, has been detained in Sudan in recent years; on what grounds he has recently been detained; and what representations he has made to the Government of Sudan about this matter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sadiq Al-Mahdi was detained immediately after the 1989 coup and has subsequently been regularly held for questioning. He was most recently detained on 20 June. Although he has not yet been formally charged, allegations have been made in the officially controlled press of his involvement in a plot to assassinate senior members of the regime and conduct acts of sabotage. Our chargé in Khartoum raised his detention with the Sudanese authorities on 21 June. We shall continue to monitor developments closely.

Corfu Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he plans to put to the European Union Heads of Government summit in Corfu on the control of nuclear proliferation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Council agreed on the adoption of a joint action on preparation for the 1995 non-proliferation treaty extension and review conference, the primary object of which would be to secure the treaty's indefinite and unconditional extension.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what difficulties are caused to British commercial interests by corruption in Kenya.

Mr. Goodlad: I am not aware of any specific difficulties caused to British commercial interests by corruption in Kenya. However, I am happy to make it clear that elimination of corruption is an important part of our good governance agenda in Kenya, as in other countries. We have made this clear to the Kenyan Government, and welcome their recent efforts to address the issue.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy stance the Western European Union has taken on the proposed French military initiative in Rwanda.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A number of WEU member states, including the United Kingdom, have indicated their readiness to assist and support the French initiative in Rwanda primarily through the provison of logistic resources, which might be co-ordinated through the WEU, and humanitarian assistance.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has had from the French Government for military support in Rwanda; and what reply he has given.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The French approached the United Kingdom, as well as other European allies, for logistic support for the intervention in Rwanda authorised under Security Council resolution 929. In the event, we understand that the French supported their operation nationally.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of when the UN Security Council's decision to deploy 5,500 troops in Rwanda will be enacted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Work on the deployment of additional troops authorised by Security Council resolution 918 is already under way. The UN expect that the force will begin to deploy in July.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the British Government are now taking through the United Nations to bring about an end to the genocide in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has supported all Security Council action aimed at bringing the attacks on civilians in Rwanda to an end. We have also offered logistic support to the expanded UNAMIR operation.

The United Kingdom supported the resolution adopted by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on 25 May which appointed a special rapporteur for human rights in Rwanda. The special rapporteur is gathering information for the United Nations Secretary General on acts which may constitute breaches of international humanitarian law and crimes against humanity, including acts of genocide in Rwanda.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to provide logistical support for African countries supplying peacekeeping troops to Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom offered the United Nations 50 four-wheel drive trucks for use in the United assistance mission to Rwanda.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement regarding the situation in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 15 June, column 615.

Since then the United Nations Security Council has authorised a two-month humanitarian intervention by the French Government. We voted in favour and remain ready to assist with emergency aid for those displaced in Rwanda as access improves. We have urged that the UNAMIR force should deploy as quickly as possible and that the French operation should not cut across United Nations action to end the bloodshed.

Arms Sales Embargo

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries on which the United Kingdom has imposed an arms sales embargo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We observe mandatory embargoes imposed by the United Nations on Iraq, the former republic of Yugoslavia, Somalia, Liberia, Haiti, Libya, Rwanda and UNITA in Angola. We observe the voluntary embargo imposed by the United Nations on Yemen.

We also observe embargoes imposed by the European Union on Syria, China, Burma, Zaire and Sudan.

We observe a voluntary embargo agreed by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe on Armenia and Azerbaijan.

In addition, as a matter of declared national policy we refuse to supply military equipment to Argentina and Iran.

Pakistan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations between Her Majesty's Government and Pakistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our relations with Pakistan are excellent.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan regarding the release of all detained democratically elected members of the National Assembly, in accordance with the United Nations human rights resolution of 1966.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware that any member of the Pakistan National Assembly is currently being detained.

Nigeria

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to assist and encourage the Government of Nigeria to move towards the establishment of democracy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the written reply I gave the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 31 January at column 485. Moves towards the establishment of democratic civilian rule would send a positive message to the European Union and other countries which have introduced measures against military rule, and to companies which do business with Nigeria. We are funding a number of practical initiatives in Nigeria in support of a democratic transition.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Welsh Affairs

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Lord President of the Council following the statement made by the Secretary of State for Wales in the Welsh Grand Committee on 8 March 1993 in Cardiff, Official Report, columns 1-13, which new initiatives he has proposed for the debate and scrutiny of Welsh affairs in the House.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

I review the need for meetings of the Welsh Grand Committee through the normal channels. The venue for these meetings is also discussed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures available for women claiming family credit while (a) in employment and (b) unemployed for (i) Burnley, (ii) Lancashire, (iii) the north-west and (iv) England.

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Statistics

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average annual disposable income at (a) actual and (b) April 1994 prices of (i) pensioner households, (ii) non-pensioner households without children (iii) non-pensioner households with children and (iv) all households, in (1) the two lowest decile groups and (2) the highest decile group, applying the appropriate equivalence scale used in his Department's recent reports on households below average income for (w) 1979, (x) 1988-89, (y) 1990-91 and (z) 1991-92, before and after housing costs; and what was the mean unequivalised disposable income of these groups of households in these equivalised categories.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. This Department does not produce statistics on the distribution of annual equivalised incomes. The households below average income series is based on incomes estimated generally over a much shorter period, which can be expected to produce different results.

Deafness

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the time limit on claims for industrial deafness.

Mr. Scott: A claim for benefit in respect of occupational deafness must be made within five years of leaving a prescribed occupation.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the differences in treatment of industrial deafness claims and war deafness claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The qualifying conditions and benefit rates for the two schemes are as follows:

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Industrial injuries benefits may be paid in respect of occupational deafness where the claimant:

(a) is assessed as at least 20 per cent. disabled as a result of sensorineural hearing loss of at least 50 decibels in both ears, being due in the case of at least one ear to noise at work;
(b) has worked in one or more of the nine occupations prescribed in relation to occupational deafness;
(c) has done such work for an aggregate period of at least ten years; and
(d) if no longer doing such work, claims benefit within five years of last doing so.

Where these conditions are satisfied, deafness is presumed to be due to employment.

War Pensions

Under the War Pensions scheme, benefit may be paid for disablement due to hearing loss which is attributable to, or aggrevated by, service in the armed forces. For sensorineural hearing loss, the claimant must be assessed as 20 per cent. disabled as a result of hearing loss of at least 50 decibles in both ears. For conductive hearing loss, the claimant must be assessed as at least 1 per cent. disabled. Doctors determine which type of deafness applies in each case.

There are no time limits for claiming under the War Pensions scheme, and no presumption of cause, but for claims arising within seven years of the termination of service, the onus is on my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the disablement is not due to a service factor. For claims arising more than seven years after the termination of service, the onus is on the claimant to show that disablement is due to service.

Benefit Rates

Weekly benefit rates are higher under the War Pensions scheme than under the Industrial Injuries scheme. The benefit rates for 1994-95 are:

Degree of disablement	War pension (£)	Industrial injuries disablement benefit (£)
100	98·90	93·20
90	89·01	83·88
80	79·12	74·56
70	69·23	65·24
60	59·34	55·92
50	49·45	46·60
40	39·56	37·28
30	29·67	27·96
20	19·78	18·64

Under the War Pensions scheme, benefit in respect of disablement due to conductive hearing loss assessed at less than 20 per cent. is paid as a lump sum gratuity.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what industries workers or former workers are eligible for consideration for industrial deafness.

Mr. Scott: Occupational deafness is prescribed for disablement benefit purposes in relation to the following occupational activities:

1. The use of powered (but not hand powered) grinding tools on cast metal (other than weld metal) or on billets or blooms in the metal producing industry, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of those tools whilst they are being so used;
2. The use of pneumatic percussive tools on metal, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of those tools whilst they are being so used;
3. The use of pneumatic percussive tools for drilling rock in quarries or underground or in mining coal, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of those tools whilst they are being so used;
4. Work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of plant (excluding power press plant) engaged in the forging (including drop stamping) of metal by means of closed or open dies or drop hammers;
5. Work in textile manufacturing where the work is undertaken wholly or mainly in rooms or sheds in which there are machines engaged in weaving man-made or natural (including mineral) fibres or in the high speed false twisting of fibres;
6. The use of, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of, machines engaged in cutting, shaping or cleaning metal nails;
7. The use of, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of, plasma spray guns engaged in the deposition of metal;
8. The use of, or work wholly or mainly in the immediate vicinity of, any of the following machines engaged in the working of wood or material composed partly of wood, that is to say; multi cutter moulding machines, planing machines, automatic or semi-automatic lathes, multiple cross-cut machines, automatic shaping machines, double-end tenoning machines, verticle spindle moulding machines (including high speed routing machines), edge banding machines, bandsawing machines with a blade width of not less than 75 millimetres and circular sawing machines in the operation of which the blade is moved towards the material being cut;
9. The use of chain saws in forestry.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 24 February, Official Report, column 368, which sets out the further activities to be added to the list of prescribed occupations from October 1994.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received on industrial deafness in the last 12 months.

Mr. Scott: In the last 12 months a total of 25 letters from members of the public and hon. Members have been received concerning various aspects of benefits in respect of industrial deafness.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's involvement with training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Burt: This Department has no formal involvement with training and enterprise councils in England and Wales, nor with local enterprise companies, their Scottish equivalents.

Family Credit Scheme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to introduce regulations regarding the £28 disregard under the family credit scheme in relation to child care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We expect the regulations to be laid in July before the recess. The legislation will come into effect from early October.

Benefit Reductions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the extent of the benefit reduction imposed in respect of claimants penalised for failing to attend a restart interview.

Mr. Burt: There is no benefit reduction for failing to attend an initial restart interview. But if a person fails, without good cause, to attend a second interview, the only entitlement will be under income support hardship rules. This entails a reduction of 40 per cent. in the single personal allowance—20 per cent if the claimant or a member of the family is pregnant or seriously ill and there is little or no capital. The reduction lasts until the claimant attends a rearranged interview or my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State withdraws the notice of the interview. The effect of these reductions on income support allowances is shown in the table.

Age of claimant	Personal allowance	Allowance less 40 per cent.	Allowance less 20 per cent.
Under 18	27·50	16·50	22·00
18-24	36·15	21·70	28·90
25 and over	45·70	27·40	36·55

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he will consult on the proposals for member-nominated trustees in occupational pension schemes as set out in his White Paper "Security, Equality, Choice: The Future for Pensions" published on 23 June.

Mr. Hague: A consultation paper is being issued today. The paper seeks views on the practical implications of our proposals for the selection of member-nominated trustees and also on the arrangements for schemes to retain or adopt different arrangements where those arrangements have the support of a majority of members. It is being issued automatically to all those organisations that responded to the earlier DSS discussion papers and is available to others on request. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Widows' Pension

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the maximum weekly additional pension payable in each year since 1979-80 to a widow whose husband had died in the same year.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Year of death	Notional[1] maximum additional pension (£)

Household Income

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average household income of householders in (a) the London borough of Barking and Dagenham and (b) the London borough of Redbridge.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. Statistics on patterns of household disposable income are available only for the United Kingdom as a whole and are provided in "Households Below Average Income 1979—1990-91" published in June 1993, a copy of which is in the Library.

One-stop Initiative

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consultation there has been in the setting up of the one-stop initiative with (a) the Employment Service and (b) local authority housing benefit offices; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how the one-stop initiative will affect the running of both the Employment Service and local authority housing benefit offices (a) in dealing with the Benefits Agency on a day-to-day basis, (b) in the co-ordination of information, (c) in the possibilities of adopting the same or similar strategy and (d) estimated costs incurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The one-stop initiative is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Peter Pike, dated 27 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the One Stop initiative.

The decision to move towards a One Stop service followed overwhelmingly positive responses from customers, including local authorities and the Employment Service Agency (ESA), to a discussion paper published in September 1992.

The Benefits Agency's (BA) One Stop initiative does not affect the running of the ESA and local authority housing benefit offices, but in continuing our commitment to customer service we work closely to ensure that our distinct responsibilities are performed in as co-ordinated a way as possible.

Each local authority's circumstances are different. BA offices are encouraged to discuss local issues with the local authority concerned. Liaison arrangements have improved and each BA District now has a Service Level Agreement with the local authorities in its area. At a national level, the Local Authorities Association are regularly consulted on developments.

The framework for improved liaison between the ESA and the BA, announced in March 1993, established a series of initiatives to encourage closer working between the two agencies. These included piloting of the co-location of BA staff in ESA outlets to provide general benefit advice and information, and joint workshops/conferences to discuss common service areas.

We are constantly looking at ways of improving the transfer of information between our offices and the ESA and local authorities. For example, in June this year, the main computer systems supporting Income Support and Unemployment benefit were linked. This allows faster, automatic transmission of information and payment instructions between the agencies.

The introduction of Jobseeker's Allowance in April 1996 will see the BA, in partnership with the ESA, providing, wherever possible, a single point of contact for unemployed customers providing both jobseeking services and a gateway to the benefit and information services of the BA. This will be from a single location, wherever possible.

One Place, which is the first phase of One Stop, has been implemented from within existing allocations and therefore at no extra cost.

It is for each Agency and organisation to decide how best to meet their customers' needs when deciding their future strategies.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the adults who applied for national insurance numbers were refused by the Contributions Agency in each of the last five years; and of these how many were (a) women and (b) from an ethnic minority background.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the issue of national insurance numbers is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 27 June 1994:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I have been asked to reply to your question about what proportion of the adults who applied for National Insurance numbers (NINOs) were refused by the Contributions Agency in each of the last five years; and of these how many were (a) women and (b) from an ethnic minority background.

The Agency is unable to provide the details you have requested as no such records are kept. But over the last 5 years more than 1 million adults have applied for and have been given a NINO.

In order to obtain a NINO an adult must usually attend a Social Security office in person and complete the appropriate application form. In addition suitable evidence of identity must be provided.

NINOs are only needed by people who are paying NI contributions so that we can keep a record of their contributions, or by people who have claimed certain Social Security benefits. A NINO is likely to be refused when it is not needed for either of these purposes or when there are doubts about the validity of the application.

I am sorry that the precise information you have requested is not available but I hope that my reply has proved helpful. If you think I could give you any more details on this topic, I would be happy to try and do so.

Income Support

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the income support live load for the area directorates in England and Wales (a) for each quarter's date of count since May 1991 to the most recent date for which figures are available and (b) for each of the E, A and P cases; and what was the percentage change in each of the case types outlined in (b) between May 1991 and the most recent date for which figures are available;

(2) what was the income support live level for the area directorates in Scotland (a) for each quarter's date of count since May 1991 to the most recent date for which figures are available and (b) for each of the E cases, A cases and P cases; what were the percentage changes in each of the case types outlined in (b) and for each area directorate (i) between May 1991 and the most recent date for which figures are available and (ii) between May 1993 and the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 27 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Questions requesting various statistical information concerning Income Support cases from the area directorates in England, Scotland and Wales from May 1991.

I have enclosed the information you requested and a copy has been placed in the Library.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the most recently available income support live level for each of the local office and benefit agency districts in Scotland for each of the E, A and P cases;

(2) what is the most recently available figure for the income support live level (a) in each of his Department's offices and (b) by each Benefits Agency district in Scotland.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 27 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about the Income Support live load in each Scottish Benefits Agency branch and district office.

I have enclosed the information you requested and a copy has been placed in the Library.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of administering the scheme for industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Mr. Scott: The administration of industrial injuries disablement benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 27 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the administrative cost of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

There are two stages to the take on of claims for the new prescribed disease chronic bronchitis and emphysema (PD D12), for which Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit has been available since 13 September 1993 for people who have worked for at least 20 years underground in a coal mine.

Our current estimate of the administrative cost for the two stage take-on of claims to PD D12 is £15·7 million. This is based on an estimated 80,000 claims and covers the three financial years 1993-94 to 1995-96.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Social Fund

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases in each Benefits Agency district in Scotland in the most recent period for which data are available an application for (a) community care grant, (b) budget loan and (c) crisis loan met the criteria but was refused because of budgetary constraints or insufficient priority; and what that was as a proportion of the total number of (i) applications and (ii) refusals in each of the Benefits Agency districts.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 27 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the operation of the Social Fund in Scotland.

I have enclosed the information you requested, relating to 1993-94 and 1994-95 to date, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

The Social Fund Computer System (SFCS), introduced to Scotland during the period March 1993—January 1994, collects statistical items differently from the previous system and they are not directly comparable with previous years. The old system recorded reasons for refusal per application, whereas the SFCS records reasons for refusal per item requested. In cases where a partial award is made, a reason for refusal will also be appropriate. Therefore, the sum of all the reasons for refusal will not equal the number of application refusals.

Social Fund Officers (SFOs) ensure that the highest priority needs are met while adopting as consistent an approach as possible. The Area SPO (District Office Manager) issues guidance on the order of priorities (high, medium or low) and the level of priority which can be sustained from the budget available to the District. Similarly, the District Office's budget, which must not be exceeded, has to be managed so that, as far as possible, similar levels of need can be met throughout the year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for help from the social fund for budgetary loans and crisis loans were refused on the grounds of inability to pay; and what that was as a proportion of the total number of (a) loan applications and (b) loan refusals for each of the Benefit Agency districts in Scotland for each year since 1990-91 for each local office.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 27 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the operation of the Social Fund in Scotland.

I have enclosed the information you requested and a copy has been placed in the Library. The Social Fund Computer System, introduced to Scotland during the period March 1993—January 1994, collects statistical items differently from the previous system and they are not directly comparable with previous years.

The actual level of refusals on the grounds of inability to repay is very low. Money advice may be given to people in these circumstances on ways to reduce expenditure in order to maximise disposable income.

The guidance to Social Fund Officers advises that where a loan application is received, the possibility that a non-repayable Community Care Grant may be more appropriate should be considered first.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

HEALTH

Children's Beds, East London

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all current proposals for closures of children's wards and beds in east London; and if she will indicate on the basis of them being implemented (a) the number of children's beds remaining and (b) the number of children in the east London area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The provision of services for children in east London is for the national health service to decide locally, taking account of all the local circumstances and the needs of patients.

Patient Participation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives her Department has taken to further the development of patient participation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department is involved in many projects which develop patient participation. These include patient representatives' projects in Brighton and Bristol, involvement of patients in the development of information for patients and regular meetings with the Patients Forum. The Department also supports the work of community health councils which are appointed by Parliament to represent patients' views.

We are conducting research to find out patients' views about the development of the patients charter. We have also met patients' organisations to look at charter standards.

In 1992 the National Health Service Executive issued guidance on "Local Voices" which sets out ways in which the public could be consulted about health services. In April 1994 the National Health Service Executive issued a leaflet "Including Local People" which included examples of good practice that showed how purchasers have involved local people. I wrote in January this year to all district health authorities to ensure that the arrangements were in place to seek and act upon the views of local people. The responses to that letter indicate that most health authorities have made significant progress.

The chief executive of the National Health Service Executive has written to regional directors to ensure that the appropriate action is taken locally and will report to me later this year.

The National Health Service Executive funded the College of Health's research into consumer audit. The College of Health has developed consumer audit as a means of obtaining qualitative feedback from patients about health care. The consumer audit guidelines were published in March 1994.

Care Charges

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued on charging patients or their carers for (a) domiciliary care, (b) day care, or (c) respite care within the national health service.

Mr. Bowis: None. There are no charges for these services when delivered to national health service patients.

Consultants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by her Department or agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) any other services in 1980 to 1983, 1984 to 1987, 1988 to 1991 and 1992-1993.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. Hague) gave him on 24 June, Official Report, columns 342-44, for information prior to 1992-93, which includes information on health projects.

Information for 1992-93 is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mortality Rate

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the figures for post-operative deaths by district health authority for each of the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: Accurate information about post-operative deaths in each district health authority is not available. Information on deaths in hospitals in the national health service in England was published in table 17 of the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin entitled "NHS Hospital Activity Statistics: England 1981 to 1991-92". Information is given on the percentage of cases in the acute sector discharged dead by regional health authority. A copy is available in the Library. Post-operative deaths which occur after patients have been discharged from hospital are not recorded.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decisions her Department has taken in respect of TECs over the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement on her Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Gold Salts

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific guidelines and advice is available for the prescription of the salt of gold sodium aurothiomolate to treat severe conditions of active rheumatical arthritis and its possible side effects.

Dr. Mawhinney: Decisions about the use of sodium aurothiomolate in the treatment of rheumatical arthritis are matters for the medical practitioners concerned.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will discuss with the north Staffordshire repetitive strain injury support group the setting up of a working party to develop an action programme to prevent repetitive strain injury and to respond to the needs of those suffering from it.

Mr. Sackville: Prevention of repetitive strain injury when caused by work is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency departments there were in London in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1993; and how many there are planned to be in the year 2000.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Sir M. Neubert) on 22 February, Official Report columns 210-11.

It is the responsibility of local health authorities to assess and secure the health services, including accident and emergency, needed by their resident populations.

Hospitals and Bed Provision

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) beds and (b) hospitals she plans to close in the next eight years.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change in the number of NHS hospital beds she expects by (a) 1996, (b) 1999 and (c) 2002.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible to make detailed predictions about the future disposition and numbers of hospitals or hospital beds. These are matters for local determination. Changes will occur with fluctuations in local need and the development of clinical practice.

Redbridge and Waltham Forest Health Authority

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on Redbridge and Waltham Forest health authority's restriction on non-emergency treatment.

Mr. Sackville: It is the health authority's role to assess the health needs of its resident population and secure services to meet those needs.

Obscene Publications Branch

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place with the social work profession on the implications of the possible closure of the obscene publications branch at Scotland Yard for children who can become victims of pornography and organised child abuse.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the implications for her Department in terms of protecting children from the abuse associated with the production of child pornography of the proposed reduction in the resources of the obscene publications branch at Scotland Yard.

Mr. Bowis: The organisation of the obscene publications branch is a matter for the Metropolitan police. I refer my hon. Friend to the Adjournment debate on 22 June, Official Report, columns 332-40.

Alternative Medicines

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Her Majesty's Government will ensure that any European directive harmonising rules relating to the sale, dispensing and prescribing of vitamin and mineral supplements shall not reduce the existing scope of legally available alternative medicines available in the United Kingdom nor the work of qualified practitioners of nutritional therapy and medical herbalists.

Mr. Sackville: In general, alternative medicines and vitamin and mineral supplements for which medicinal claims are made are subject to the provisions of the Medicines Act but herbal remedies prepared and prescribed by herbalists for individual patients are exempt from the licensing requirements. No proposals have been made for a directive to harmonise the status of vitamin and mineral supplements and we have no plans to change the existing arrangements governing the availability of alternative medicines.

Welsh Health Planning Forum

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she received the report of the Welsh Health Planning Forum published on 23 June; and what is her assessment of its conclusions on the impact of bed closures and the potential for keyhole surgery and day case operations.

Mr. Sackville: We have not had the opportunity to study the report. The national health service has already achieved a 160 per cent. increase in day cases between 1982 and 1992-93. We are determined to promote all practices that improve the quality of care for patients.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died from skin cancer in 1993.

Mr. Sackville: Data from 1993 are not yet available. In 1992, in England, there were 1,065 deaths from malignant melanoma of skin (ICD[1] 172) and 457 deaths from other malignant neoplasm of skin (ICD[1] 173).

[1] International Classification of Diseases, 9th revision.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of melanoma and non-melanoma skin cancers have been reported in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available information is shown in the table.

	Malignant melanoma of skin (ICD[1] 172)	Other malignant neoplasm of skin (ICD[1] 173)[2]
England[3]	3,661	30,250
Wales[3]	220	1,748
Scotland[4]	477	4,111
Northern Ireland[4]	46	573

[1] International Classification of Diseases, 9th revision.
[2] Other malignant neoplasm of skin is under-registered.
[3] 1988 data.
[4] 1991 data.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated current cost per case of treating a patient with (a) malignant melanoma of the skin and (b) other malignant neoplasm of the skin.

Mr. Sackville: The costs of specific procedures or those associated with specific diagnoses are not available centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the mortality and incidence rates, per 100,000 population, for malignant melanoma of skin, ICD 172, and other malignant neoplasm of skin, ICD 173, for each year since 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Incidence and mortality rates per 100,000 population in England for malignant melanoma of skin (ICD[1] 172) and other malignant neoplasm of skin (ICD[1] 173)

	Incidence (1988)	Mortality (1992)
Malignant melanoma of skin	7·7	2·2
Other malignant neoplasm of skin	63·5	0·9

[1] International Classification of Diseases, 9th revision.

General Practitioners

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data has been collected by her Department on the administrative costs of (a) fundholding and (b) non-fundholding arrangements in general practice.

Dr. Mawhinney: The administrative costs of purchasing by general practitioner fundholders are about 2 per cent. of budgets set. Comparable information about the purchasing costs of district health authorities on behalf of non-fundholding general practitioners is not available.

Necrotising Fasciitis

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the misclassification of necrotising fasciitis on (a) death certificates and (b) hospital finished consultant episodes and data of disease and treatment.

Mr. Sackville: No studies have been done to ascertain what doctors record on the death certificates of patients who have had necrotising fasciitis. From 1990 to 1992, when necrotising fasciitis was given as the underlying cause of death, this was coded by Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys as "fasciitis unspecified" using the international classification of disease index.

Hospital League Tables

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for publishing league tables for NHS hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall tomorrow publish the first National Health Service performance tables: copies will be placed in the Library at 11 am and available in the Vote Office.

Special Hospitals

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) where the two new special hospitals are to be built; and when they will become operational;

(2) if she will make it her policy that special hospitals shall not be granted trust status;

(3) when the Reed report on special hospitals will be published; and what has been the reason for the length of time between its completion and publication.

Mr. Bowis: We have not reached any firm conclusions on the future of high security services. There are no current plans to build new special hospitals or to change the status of existing special hospitals. The report of the working group on high security services raises important issues about service development which require careful consideration by this and other Government Departments. We hope to publish the report soon.

Private Beds

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance her Department has given to NHS trust hospitals about charging patients for use of private beds when no NHS beds are available;

(2) what guidelines her Department issued about the use of empty private beds in trust hospitals when all NHS beds are full.

Mr. Sackville: All beds in national health service hospitals can be used by patients receiving NHS treatment.

General Practitioners

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reviews her Department has commissioned of the administrative cost of general practitioner fundholding; and when she intends to publish the results of those reviews.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. The National Health Service Executive will be reviewing the current system of management allowances for general practitioner fundholders during the summer.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what reports she has received from the advisory committee on dangerous pathogens concerning Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease; and if she will place these in the Library;

(2) what precautions have been introduced for laboratory staff who may be handling materials contaminated with the agents causing (a) Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease and (b) bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

(3) what guidance she has received from the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens on transmissible spongiform encephalopathies; when that guidance was received; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Specific guidance from the advisory committee on dangerous pathogens will be available shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

6. Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in the past nine months in improving delivery of the youth training guarantee in England.

Miss Widdecombe: Excellent progress.

Employment Service

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the Employment Service's results against the annual performance agreement set for the 1993-94 year; and when he expects the Employment Service to publish its annual report and accounts.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the Employment Service has continued to build on the success of recent years and in 1993-94 achieved an excellent level of performance against its annual targets. The following table details the ES's performance results against the 1993-94 annual performance agreement. Overall, the ES placed 1·64 million unemployed people into jobs, of whom 462,200—28·2 per cent.—had been out of work for six months or more and 53,300—3·25 per cent.—were people with a disability; performance in each case exceeded target. In addition, the ES met or exceeded its targets for promptness of benefit payment, delivering advisory interviews and for claims withdrawn following fraud investigation, and ended a mere fraction—0·1 per cent. —short of its target for benefit accuracy.

I am also pleased to announce that for the 1993-94 year and beyond the ES will be publishing fully audited commercial style accounts in its annual report. The ES's annual report and accounts for 1993-94 will be laid before Parliament, as an Act Paper, after the summer recess. In previous years, the ES's annual report and accounts has not been formally laid, and has included only an unaudited cash based financial statement. I am confident that the fuller, commercial-style accounts will serve to emphasise the extent to which the ES delivers value for taxpayers' money.

Long-term Unemployment, Merseyside

15. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the long-term unemployed men and women on Merseyside.

Mr. David Hunt: The Employment Service and the local training and enterprise councils already offer the widest-ever range of employment, enterprise and training opportunities for long-term unemployed people on Merseyside.

17. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with his EU counterparts on the transfer of undertakings directive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had discussions with counterparts from a number of other EU countries concerning revision of the acquired rights directive.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much unemployment has changed in each EU country since January 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: Claimant unemployment in the United Kingdom is down by over 300,000 since January 1993, while registered unemployment in the rest of Europe rose by 1·5 million.

19. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new full-time equivalent jobs have been created during the past 15 months.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not believe that full-time equivalence is a meaningful concept. However, the labour force survey shows that total hours worked rose by 0·6 per cent. over the year to winter 1993.

20. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women, excluding those on training schemes, were in (i) full-time and (ii) part-time jobs in June 1979 and at the latest date for which figures are available; and in how many standard planning regions the number of jobs has increased for (1) men and (2) women, considering part-time and full-time separately.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is provided in the table:

Employees and self-employed: Great Britain (thousands)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for (a) more than one year and (b) more than two years in (i) Greater London and (ii) the Streatham parliamentary constituency; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the levels of claimant unemployment by duration is available from 1983, on the unadjusted basis only, for the months of January, April, July and October. It can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the unemployment figures are for Devon for May 1994; and what percentage change they represent on the figures for May 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: Unadjusted claimant unemployment figures in the county of Devon stood at 44,405 in May 1994, a fall of 1·6 per cent. since May 1992. However, between May 1993 and May 1994, unemployment fell by over 11 per cent.

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In May, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment stood at 2,661,000, a fall of 258,000 on a year ago.

21. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently unemployed in the Basildon constituency; and what was the figure one year ago.

Miss Widdecombe: Between May 1993 and May 1994 unadjusted claimant unemployment in Basildon fell by 959 from 6,500 to 5,541.

Unemployment

23. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the major European countries where unemployment is on a clear downward trend.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only the United Kingdom.

24. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current levels of unemployment in the United Kingdom textile and paper and board industries.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimates from the winter 1993-94 labour force survey are that there were 29,000 unemployed people—on the International Labour Organisation definition—who last worked in the textiles and textile produces industry and 17,000 unemployed people who last worked in the manufacture of pulp, paper and paper products industry.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the level of unemployment among younger men has changed during the past 12 months.

Miss Widdecombe: In the United Kingdom between April 1993 to April 1994, unadjusted claimant unemployment among 18 to 24-year-old men fell by 73,435—13 per cent.

Modern Apprenticeships

22. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the progress of his new apprenticeship initiative in the east midlands.

Miss Widdecombe: Four training and enterprise councils in the east midlands are at the forefront of the development of modern apprenticeships.

25. Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's modern apprenticeship scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Employers have given an overwhelmingly positive response to the challenge set by modern apprenticeships, and prototypes are due to be in place by September.

Public Services (Privatisation)

26. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take in response to the decision of the European Court of Justice that the British Government are in breach of European law by failing to ensure adequate worker representation in the privatisation of public services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are considering the judgment.

OECD Report

27. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had on the recent Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report with colleagues in the EU; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have discussed the OECD report with colleagues on several occasions, in particular at the ministerial meeting in Paris on 7 June. There has been strong support for its conclusions. The report makes it clear that flexible skills and working practices are a crucial factor in reducing unemployment; and that statutory minimum wages and excessive non-wage labour costs reduce employment prospects, particularly for young people.

Women's Issues Working Group

29. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how regularly the women's issues working group meets; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The women's issues working group meets three times a year. It is a personal advisory group chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State which considers some of the obstacles encountered by women in their working lives, and advises on ways to overcome them. It currently has 14 members.

Restart

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many claimants have (a) lost and (b) suffered a reduction in benefit because of (i) their failure to turn up to a Restart interview and (ii) their failure to adopt the course of action advocated at their interview, in each year since Restart began;

(2) how many claimants have (a) lost unemployment benefit and (b) suffered a reduction in supplementary benefit or income support because of their failure to satisfy the availability for work rules for each year since 1974.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people are currently on the Restart programme;

(2) if those people on Restart programmes are included in the official unemployment statistics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 28 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about the numbers of people currently on the Restart Programme and whether they are included in the official unemployment statistics. I am replying in the Chief Executive's absence.

It may help if I explain that Restart is not a programme but a series of regular six monthly interviews with an adviser, for people who have been unemployed for six months or more. These interviews provide clients with the opportunity to discuss their situation, consider the options available and agree a course of action which, if taken, will offer the best prospects of finding a job. Advisers also make sure that clients understand and continue to meet the conditions for receipt of benefit. The number of Restart interviews that have taken place in 1993-94 is 2,800,000. The clients involved are included in the official unemployment statistics.

For those people who are still unsure about which course of action to take, Restart Courses are available. These are designed to give participants a more in-depth opportunity to assess their strengths and skills and become aware of local opportunities available to them in planning steps back to work. The courses also provide guidance and help in job search.

In the 12 months from April 1993 until March 1994 over 143,000 people started on a Restart Course. From April this year 22,000 have started on a course.

Participants remain on the unemployment register and continue to receive normal unemployment benefits whilst attending the course. They are, therefore, included in the official unemployment statistics. Fares to and from the course are also paid.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the numbers attending Restart interviews for each year since 1986 and the outcome of these interviews for each year in question;

(2) how many benefit reductions have been made each year since section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975 has come into force.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which TECs currently offer extended child care places to children aged five years and over outside normal school hours and during school holidays; and how many places each TEC has available.

Miss Widdecombe: From April 1994, all training and enterprise councils will be making grants available to help establish new after-school and holiday-care places under the Government's out-of-school child-care initiative. A total of 50,000 new places are expected to be created across Britain by March 1996.

In 1993-94 a limited number of TECs ran the initiative. Latest available figures in the following table show the number of places notified by each TEC as created up to March 1994.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) black and (b) Asian people serve on each TEC; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the ethnic origin of training and enterprise council board members is provided voluntarily by the TECs. The following table shows that there are 38 TEC board members of ethnic origin on the board of 28 TECs. This information may not give the complete picture of the ethnic origin of TEC board members. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants in his Department took early retirement on being seconded to work for a training and enterprise council.

Miss Widdecombe: None. While on secondment working for a training and enterprise council, all departmental staff remained employees of the Department.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report column 505, what information was given to the chairman of the training and enterprise councils, concerning the rights of civil servants seconded to the TECs to be eligible for the voluntary early retirement scheme and pertaining to their permanent employment with those TECs after completion of their secondment period.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils were told that the early retirement schemes were not meant for secondees who intended taking up TEC employment.

Child Care

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the out-of-school child care initiative; and what are his future plans for the initiative.

Miss Widdecombe: The out-of-school child care initiative was piloted in 40 training and enterprise council areas in 1993-94, leading to the creation of over 4,000 after school and holiday places. From April 1994 to March 1996, the initiative will be delivered by every TEC, and we hope to create up to 50,000 new places across Great Britain.

European Employment Legislation

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the European Commission about the implementation of EU employment legislation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Community's agenda must now be focused on creating jobs rather than destroying them through unnecessary employment regulations. The United Kingdom is playing a leading part in efforts to improve Europe's competitiveness in this and other ways.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Personal Injury Cases

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average value, as stated by plaintiffs, of those personal injury claims commenced in the county courts for each year since 1990.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not recorded throughout the year but only from cases concluded during the months of March and November. From these samples, the average figures can be projected as follows:

Year	£
1990	3,273·71
1991	3,561·31
1992	3,956·86
1993	5,054·47
1994	6,895·96

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many lawyers currently employed by his Department have a minimum of three years experience in dealing with personal injury cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No statistics are kept on the information which the hon. Member seeks, and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the main concerns expressed by respondents to the consultation paper entitled, "Small Personal Injury Claims."

Mr. John M. Taylor: Approximately 150 responses to the consultation paper were received and they are currently being evaluated. Respondents came from a wide variety of interested groups and their responses varied accordingly in scope and tone. The majority of respondents who disagreed with the proposals were those who consider the small claims procedure an inappropriate forum for personal injury claims under any circumstances, particularly because it limits recoverable costs.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will define the meaning of non-standard injury as set out in paragraph 33, part a, in the consultation paper, "Small Personal Injury Claims."

Mr. John M. Taylor: Paragraphs 31 to 34 of the consultation paper set out the safeguard which will ensure that each case is dealt with in the appropriate forum according to subject matter, and not value alone. It is proposed that, where a district judge decides that a case is unsuited to arbitration, for example because an injury had come about in complex circumstances or was of unpredictable severity, he would be able to refer the matter for trial.

District Judges

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will outline the full range of duties, other than disposing of cases by trial, which are performed by district judges.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A description of the jurisdiction and duties of the office of district judge is contained in the consultation paper "Developments in Judicial Appointments Procedures" which was issued on 19 May 1994. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1998 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information that the Department has about these types of contract relates only to 1992-93 and is not broken down in a way which allows the question to be answered in the detail sought. However, on the best information currently available, total expenditure on external consultants during that year was £3.455 million. For projects costing less than £20,000 no detailed information is readily available, but for those above that amount which were completed in that year, the details are as follows:

Consultants	Number of contracts	amount £000's
Coopers & Lybrand	2	57
KPMG	2	115
Ernst & Young	2	52
Price Waterhouse	6	1,396

NORTHERN IRELAND

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the reorganisation of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland in advance of the privatisation of these services.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the reorganisation of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland in advance of the privatisation of these services.

Mr. Tim Smith: As my hon. Friend, the then Minister of State made clear to the House on 20 April 1993, the Government remain committed to the privatisation of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland as soon as practicable, but will not be able to do so, for tehnical reasons, during the lifetime of the present Parliament. In the interim, I have decided that the Water Executive of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, which is responsible for the delivery of water and sewerage services, should become a "next steps" agency not later than April 1996. This will enable the Water Executive to operate as a separate unit in the Department, within a framework of appropriate efficiency targets and performance measures, and will build on work to develop the commercial orientation of the organisation.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland in 1994-95.

Mr. Tim Smith: For 1994-95, the following key performance targets have been set for the agency:

To meet an overall efficiency gain of 2 per cent.

To reduce the unit cost per vehicle excise enforcement case completed to £21·73 (at 1992-93 prices).

To dispatch 90 per cent. of registration books for new vehicles within 16 working days of the receipt of application.

To dispatch 90 per cent. of refunds of vehicle excise duty within 11 working days of receipt.

To dispatch 92 per cent. of vehicle excise licences within six working days of receipt of postal applications.

To dispatch 92 per cent. of duplicate vehicle registration books within six working days of receipt of applications.

To dispatch 96 per cent. of amended vehicle registration books (following changes to vehicles or keepers) within eight working days of receipt of applications.

To dispatch 91 per cent. of ordinary driving licences within 11 working days of receipt of applications.

To dispatch 96 per cent. of vocational driving licences within 11 working days of receipt of applications.

To dispatch 91 per cent. of provisional driving licences within 10 working days of receipt of applications.

To dispatch substantive replies to 90 per cent. of written inquiries within four working days of receipt.

To limit maximum waiting time at local vehicle licensing offices to 25 minutes during peak periods (the first eight and last two working days of each month) and 10 minutes at other periods.

To reduce the error rate (errors on any item sent out by the agency) to 0·5 per cent. of total agency output.

PRIME MINISTER

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of organisations for, and of, disabled people to discuss the need for comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation; when he next plans to meet such representatives; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have had a number of meetings with interested parties. My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Disabled People, has also had a number of such meetings, including one with the all-party disablement group on 15 March. He keeps me fully informed of the issues which are discussed.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in relation to access by disabled people to buildings open to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Section 4 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 and section 4 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 oblige those who provide buildings which are visited by members of the public to make provision for disabled people. In addition, the Government have introduced provisions within building regulations for the benefit of such people. These provisions apply predominantly to new buildings and some extensions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pigs

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amounts have been received in EC subsidies and support by British, French and German pig farmers in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: The CAP pigmeat regime is lightweight and very little direct support is available.

Under the guarantee section of the common agriculture policy—FEOGA—expenditure on export refunds and private storage aid for pigmeat, neither of which are paid direct to producers, was as follows:

(ecu million)

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993 (provisional)

Copies of the FEOGA financial reports are in the House of Commons Library.

Refunds for certain pigmeat exports to non-EC countries are available to all member states. Germany has traditional markets in eastern Europe and is the third largest exporter of pigmeat from the EC to third countries.

Private storage aid schemes, when introduced by the EC, are also available to all member states and provide short-term relief from difficulties caused by seasonal oversupply of the pigmeat market. The United Kingdom pigmeat industry generally sees PSA schemes as being of little benefit and United Kingdom take up is very small.

Exceptional support measures can be introduced by the EC when orderly marketing cannot otherwise take place. As a result of outbreaks of classical swine fever in Germany, where movement restrictions exist, 2·063 mecu was paid during the 1993 FEOGA budget year and 56 mecu has so far been paid this year. No such measures have needed to be introduced in France or the United Kingdom.

EC veterinary funds can be made available to assist member states in eradicating certain animal diseases, including pig diseases. No such payments have been made to the United Kingdom in the last five years and details of any payments to France or Germany are not available to us.

On capital grant schemes, the ministry has paid £5·7 million to pig producers since 1989. A small element of this is reimbursed by the EC. Figures for France and Germany are not available to us.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list those of her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Jack: Prior to legislation proposals, the Government are required to consult the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, the Committee on Agricultural Valuation, the Sugar Beet Research and Education Council and the Veterinary Products Committee. They are not required to publish their responses.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which have a statutory basis.

Mr. Jack: The following non-departmental public bodies have a statutory basis:

The Advisory Committee on Pesticides
The Agricultural Dwelling House Advisory Committees
The Consumers' Committees for Great Britain and for England and Wales
The Committees of Investigation for Great Britain and for England and Wales
The Committee on Agricultural Valuation
The Hill Farming Advisory Committee
The Veterinary Products Committee.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Jack: Only the Veterinary Products Committee is required to produce an annual report, but the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and the Food Advisory Committee also do so.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Jack: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advisory bodies she has set up in her Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Jack: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Jack: None, but in practice a number do so.

Meat Imports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the countries, in order of frequency, from which meat treated with (a) clenbuterol and (b) other beta-agonists has been imported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Soames: Beta-agonists—which include clenbuterol—are a group of drugs which have been used for a number of years in licensed veterinary medicines to treat respiratory ailments in cattle and horses and as an aid to cattle at the time of calving. There are no requirements for those importing meat into the United Kingdom to declare whether it has come from animals treated with these medicinal products. I regret therefore that I cannot supply the hon. Member with the information requested.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the number of cases of bovine TB in cattle imported from Ireland in each year since 1990 and in each month of 1994.

Mr. Soames: The number of confirmed cases of bovine TB in cattle imported from Ireland in each year since 1990 were:

	Number
1990	12
1991	18
1992	3
1993	4
1994	[1]Nil

[1] Provisional figure as at 28 June.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what methods of screening Irish cattle for bovine TB are in place; and what measures she intends to introduce.

Mr. Soames: All Irish cattle, except bullocks, are tested for bovine tuberculosis 60 days after importation. In addition, all animals in herds maintained by or which have regular intakes of Irish cattle are tested annually. The routine testing interval for herds which import bullocks from Ireland for fattening purposes is set at the discretion of the divisional veterinary officer. No further measures are considered necessary.

Dumb Cane

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to bring forward measures to restrict the sale from supermarkets, garden centres and other retail outlets of Dieffenbachia picta—Dumb Cane—and other species of that genus, or to make the prominent display of safety warning labels mandatory at sites of sale; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The conditions under which potentially hazardous plants are sold by supermarkets and garden centres is a matter currently being considered by the horticultural industry. An industry voluntary code of practice is in the final stages of preparation and is expected to be published later in the summer. This is an industry-led initiative and a good example of self-regulation.

Fish Marketing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what fish producing organisations were consulted on her marketing development scheme.

Mr. Jack: The following organisations with an interest in fisheries were consulted on the proposals for the marketing development scheme:

Anglo-North Irish Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.
Anglo-Scottish Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.
British Crayfish Marketing Association
Cornish Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.
Fleetwood Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.
Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.
Grimsby Fish Producers' Organisations
Institute of Fisheries Management
Lowestoft Fish Producers' Organisation
National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations
New British Trout Association
Salmon and Trout Association
Shellfish Association of Great Britain
South Western Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.
United Kingdom Association of Fish Producers' Organisations
Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producers' Organisation Ltd.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Jack: The Department's policy is to review the scope for publication on a case-by-case basis having regard to the code of practice on open government and agreed contractual terms covering commercial confidentiality. The Department may in some cases publish a synopsis of the report rather than the report itself.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by her Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Jack: Over the period April 1992 to date the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by the Department in relation to market testing is estimated to be £684,000.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Broadcasting

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration he has given to alternative sources of revenue for the BBC other than licence fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Our consultation document on the future of the BBC, published in November 1992, invited views on a number of possible alternatives to the licence fee. The Government's conclusions will be set out in the White Paper that we plan to publish shortly.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the total licence revenue of the BBC arising from those purchasing licences in (a) England, (b) Northern Ireland, (c) Scotland and (d) Wales; and what proportion of the total income of the BBC is represented by revenue derived from television licences.

Mr. Brooke: BBC licence fee income for 1992-93 was £1,597·7 million. This represented 87 per cent. of total BBC income in 1992-93. Figures for television licence revenue by country are not available. However, the number of television licences in force by country as at 31 March 1993 was:

	Number
England	16,869,000
Northern Ireland	338,000
Scotland	1,724,000
Wales	1,066,000

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment has been made by his Department of the value for money provided by the BBC to its viewers, in relation to the cost of a television licence and to the services provided by other networks.

Mr. Brooke: We appointed independent consultants, Touche Ross, in mid-1993 to advise on the level of the television licence fee from 1994-96. The study, as well as examining the BBC's progress in pursuing efficiency measures, included comparisons of the BBC's performance and staff costs with those of commercial broadcasters. A copy of the management summary of the study is in the Library. I announced the Government's decision on the future level of the licence fee on 4 November 1993 at columns 309-10.

Yorkshire Mining Museum

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of the Yorkshire Mining museum, Caphouse.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 27 June 1994]: I visited the Yorkshire mining museum on Friday 10 December. I was very impressed by what I saw. The chairman of the trustees, Councillor Norman Hartshorne, the then vice-chairman, Councillor Robert Mitchell, and the director of the museum, Dr. Margaret Faull, explained to me the financial difficulties which the museum would face, following the restructuring of the coal industry. These difficulties arose mainly from the fact that the traditional help in kind to the museum from British Coal would no longer be available. I said that I would do everything I properly could, consistent with the DNH's relationship with other museums, to help.

The Government have now decided that the Department of National Heritage will receive additional provision in order to give the Yorkshire mining museum, the only mining museum in England with underground workings, transitional assistance of £300,000, spread over three years. The Museums and Galleries Commission has agreed to administer the provision of this financial assistance. My officials will shortly be discussing with the commission the arrangements for doing this.

I shall be looking for further, non-financial ways to help ensure the profitable continuance of the Yorkshire mining museum—although I emphasise that the future of the Yorkshire mining museum is for its trustees to determine. I wrote on Friday 24 June to the director of the museum suggesting an early meeting to discuss such matters. In the meantime, I have asked Sir Neil Cossons, director of the National Museum of Science and Industry, if he would be prepared to give the Yorkshire mining museum his advice on a wide range of relevant subjects, including sponsorship. He has generously agreed.

The future of the mining museums, so central to the history of Britain's industrial development, and thus to her wealth, and to her role and influence in the rest of the world, will be one of the subjects to which I want to pay particular attention in the review that my Department is undertaking of our policy towards the whole museum sector.

I should like to thank my hon. Friend, the Member for Batley and Spen (Mrs. Peacock) my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks), the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) and the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Gunnell) among others on both sides of the House, for their valuable advice.

ENVIRONMENT

Recycling

2. Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards the Government's target of recycling 25 per cent. of reusable household waste.

Mr. Atkins: Recovery of household waste will increase dramatically as a result of the producer responsibility challenges which we have set for the packaging and newsprint industries and others.

Packaging alone is over 20 per cent. of household waste and the industry draft plan aims to recover 58 per cent. of packaging waste by 2000 and to extend close-to-home recycling facilities to eight out of 10 homes.

19. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to encourage recycling.

Mr. Gummer: Our policy is to help promote recycling through a wide range of measures including the recent producer responsibility initiative, which means that those who make and sell products and packaging should take a share of responsibility for the beneficial re-use of their waste. Current producer responsibility initiatives cover packaging, newspapers, batteries, tyres, vehicles and electronic equipment.

Water Metering

9. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the chairmen of the main water companies about the introduction of compulsory water metering for domestic households.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State has discussions with the chairmen of water companies from time to time. Alternative methods of charging to replace rateable values are sometimes discussed. It is for each company to decide on an appropriate basis for charging, but metering, which relates charges to consumption, has many advantages.

Wildlife Sites

15. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory protection there is for important wildlife sites that do not qualify as sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Gummer: The Government encourage local authorities to make full use of their powers under section 21 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949. They should also adopt appropriate policies in their development plans and under planning legislation to protect such sites.

Local Government Finance

16. Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to revise future revenue support grant allocations to local authorities, so as to improve the sums granted to councils in Devon and Cornwall relative to those in the south east of England.

Mr. Curry: We are discussing with the local authority associations a number of possible changes in the allocation of revenue support grant.

33. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the local government support grant for urban authorities for 1995-96.

Mr. Curry: We are discussing with the local authority associations a number of possible changes in the allocation of revenue support grant.

24. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the funding of local services on Merseyside.

Mr. Baldry: I have nothing to add to the full reply I gave in response to the hon. Member's Adjournment debate on 26 May 1994, Official Report, columns 430-38.

Water Quality

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that the Mediterranean countries are enforcing EC directives on water quality at the same speed and in same way as in Britain; and if he will make a statement about cross-border enforcement.

Mr. Atkins: It is for the EC Commission to take the initiative to ensure implementation of directives and relevant international conventions to which the Community is signatory. The United Kingdom Government have continued to press for effective and consistent enforcement of directives, and the Commission now makes annual reports on implementation to the Environment Council.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 393, what requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 concern product specifications for sewerage pipe.

Mr. Atkins: None: the 1989 regulations are concerned only with the quality of water delivered to the customer.

Countryside Commission

18. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of merging the Countryside Commission and English Nature.

Mr. Atkins: An announcement will be made once my right hon. Friend has had an opportunity to consider the report on the results of the merger study.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

20. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representatives he has received from British or foreign non-governmental organisations concerning the posing of environmental risks by the THORP.

Mr. Atkins: No representatives, but a number of representations have been received on this subject.

Local Government Reorganisation

21. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from hon. Members for Warwickshire constituencies about local government reorganisation in the county.

Mr. Curry: Since the announcement of the acceleration of the Local Government Commission's reviews on 30 September, Ministers in the Department have received the following letters from hon. Members in Warwickshire specifically on local government structure in the county:
Alan Howarth—5 November 1993 and 17 May 1994
Mike O'Brien—12 October 1993
James Pawsey—5 October 1993 and 31 May 1994
Sir Dudley Smith—15 October 1993

Nature Conservation Committee

22. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to discuss its annual budget.

Mr. Atkins: My predecessor, the hon. Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo), met the chairman of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee last July to discuss a range of topics including the committee's priorities and budget. I will be holding a similar meeting with the Earl of Selborne before the summer recess.

Local Government Electors

23. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average number of electors per councillor in (a) metropolitan districts, (b) London boroughs and (c) shire districts, including county councillors.

Mr. Curry: The number of councillors on each council in England is not prescribed in primary legislation but has been determined, by order, for individual authorities on the basis of recommendations from the Local Government Boundary Commission.

The LGBC did however establish an average ratio of councillors to electorate to act as a guideline in drawing up its recommendations. The average number of electors per councillor used by the LGBC was:

	Number
Metropolitan districts	4,540
London Boroughs	4,530
Shire Counties	9,280
Shire districts	2,140

Local Government Review

25. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of consulting on and implementing the recommendations of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn).

26. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost (a) to central Government and (b) to local government of the local government review.

Mr. Curry: The Local Government Commission incurred expenditure of £2·056 million in 1992-93 and received grant in aid of £5·124 million in 1993-94.

We do not have overall figures for the expenditure incurred indirectly by central Government, or directly by local authorities, on the local government review.

Air Quality

27. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new targets he proposes to set following the report in February by the expert panel on air quality standards and benzene.

Mr. Atkins: I hope to make a statement on future air quality standards for benzene in the autumn, when we have completed consideration of responses to our recent consultation paper, "Improving Air Quality".

31. Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to announce new initiatives to improve air quality in British cities.

Mr. Atkins: We published wide-ranging consultation proposals on the further improvement of air quality in March. We will announce our conclusions on the next steps later in the year when we have considered responses to the consultation.

Beaches

28. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many British beaches now comply with EC pollution standards; and by what date he estimates all British beaches will do so.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 365 or 80 per cent. of United Kingdom bathing waters, complied with the relevant standards of the EC directive over the 1993 bathing season. The substantial programme of improvements to non-compliant waters is designed to bring virtually all the waters up to standard for the 1996 season.

Car Parking, Plymouth

29. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to investigate the use by Plymouth city council of its car parking revenue account.

Mr. Baldry: This is not a matter for the Government, and I have no such plans. If there are allegations of impropriety or illegality they should be referred to the independent auditor appointed to audit the city council's accounts.

Housing, Basildon

32. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the condition of the housing stock in Basildon.

Sir George Young: We are aware that there are problems of poor design and construction in some of Basildon's housing, in particular that built by the former new town development corporation. Very substantial resources are being invested in renovation or redevelopment, with help from the Estate Action and Housing Partnership programmes and under the terms of transfer of the new town housing.

Disabled People (Council Tax)

34. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about exemption from the council tax for disabled people.

Mr. Baldry: There is no exemption for disabled people from the council tax. However, people who are severely mentally impaired are not counted in the personal element of the tax and their presence will not add to the household's bill. Disabled persons may be entitled to a one band reduction in council tax if they need extra rooms or more space as a result of their special needs than would otherwise be the case.

Opencast Mining

35. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to reform planning law on opencast mining.

Mr. Baldry: Opencast coal mining is subject to the same planning law that applies to all mineral extraction. However, my Department has recently completed public consultation on draft revised planning guidelines for coal extraction and colliery spoil disposal which set tough environmental tests. New guidance will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available figures for levels of extraction of opencast coal.

Mr. Baldry: According to statistics compiled by the County Planning Officers' Society, 10·07 million tonnes of opencast coal were produced in England during the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993. The equivalent figures for Scotland and Wales are 5·4 million tonnes and 2·38 million tonnes.

Rough Sleepers

36. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to deal with the special housing needs of those people sleeping in the Bullring at Waterloo.

Sir George Young: The Bullring at Waterloo is one of five areas specifically targeted under the Government's £180 million rough sleepers initiative in central London. A consortium of statutory and voluntary agencies, chaired by the London borough of Lambeth, is co-ordinating activity in the area. The Government are funding voluntary sector outreach and resettlement workers to assess the needs of the individuals sleeping rough in the Bullring and to assist them into suitable accommodation.

EC Directives

37. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which EC directives on environmental matters have yet to be fully incorporated into United Kingdom law.

Mr. Atkins: The main environmental directives still to be legally transposed in the United Kingdom are the nitrates directive, the urban waste water treatment directive and the habitats directive. The steps necessary to give effect to these are well in hand.

Single Regeneration Budget

38. Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of unallocated funds for 1995-96 under the single regeneration budget.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 14 April 1994 at column 239.

Local Government Commission

39. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Local Government Commission to evaluate the commission's work.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend last met Sir John Banham on 18 January. I met Sir John on 13 June.

National Parks

Mrs. Anne Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he will bring forward proposals to implement changes in the administration of national parks.

Mr. Atkins: The Local Government (Wales) Bill will allow my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales, to establish joint or special planning boards for the three national parks in Wales. However, it is our intention to introduce legislation to establish independent authorities for all 10 national parks in England and Wales as soon as there is a suitable opportunity to do so.

Water and Sewerage Companies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responsibilities the Director General of Ofwat has for monetary arrangements for the certification of products used by water and sewerage companies.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the 14th annual report from his Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and what response he plans to make to the recommendations made by Professor Knill's committee.

Mr. Atkins: The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's 14th annual report was sent to my right hon. Friend on 17 June. We will respond to it in due course.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will request the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels to make available to hon. Members copies of the BNFL submissions to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee on the matter of nuclear waste substitution options for foreign reprocessing waste arisings, since his deposition before Parliament on 25 June last year of his correspondence with the chairman of RWMAC on the matter.

Mr. Atkins: As we have not yet received the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's further advice on waste substitution, I am unable to consider this request.

Elderly People (Housing)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the final draft of the Ernst and Young study into the housing needs of the elderly; what was the final cost of the study; when the report will be placed in the Library; what conclusions he has drawn from the report; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department received a full set of interim reports on the 12 individual parts of the study in February 1994. We expect to publish a single report, summarising these findings, in the autumn. A copy will be placed in the Library.

I announced some interim findings from the research at a conference on affordable housing and community care organised by Hertfordshire county council earlier this year. A key finding is that the vast majority of elderly people wish to remain in their present homes, confirming the Government's community care policies. The study also suggests there is currently an over-provision of ordinary sheltered housing with warden support only, but under-provision of very sheltered housing with extra care facilities. We will consider carefully the policy implications of these and other findings from the study.

Following a competitive tender, the research contract was let to Ernst and Young and its sub-contractor, MORI, at a cost of £956,000.

European Structural Funds

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that appropriate technical assistance is made available for applications under objectives 2 and 5 (b) of European structural funds.

Mr. Baldry: Technical assistance grants are available only from within the United Kingdom's structural funds allocation. If any such grants are made, the amount left for projects is correspondingly smaller. Therefore, the Government consider that the funds should be used primarily for projects, and have sought to minimise the use of technical assistance.

Normal practice should be that applicants bear the cost of making applications themselves. This ensures equity between applicants and it is a sound principle that applicant bodies should pay for their own administration.

As in all other fields, Government Departments and offices will gladly assist those who may have difficulty in completing applications. However, it is recognised that there may be some organisations, especially in the voluntary sector, who may need extra help. Limited technical assistance may exceptionally be made available to support recognised bodies in bringing forward high quality applications.

Waste Management

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts for refuse collection, cleansing waste management and waste control have been awarded by local authorities to (a) UK Waste Management Ltd., (b) the FOCSA and (c) Leigh; and what is the total value in each case.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend does not require local authorities to inform him to whom contracts are awarded, unless such information is requested in connection with his responsibility for investigating potential breaches of the compulsory competitive tendering legislation. The Department does not therefore maintain a comprehensive record of either the number or value of contracts awarded to specific private sector contractors.

Homelessness

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is her estimate of the cost of providing public housing or other publicly-funded residential care for people who are homeless in England; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In 1992-93 40 per cent. of new tenancies in local authority and housing association stock were allocated to households whom local authorities accepted as homeless under part III of the Housing Act 1985. Over the three years 1992-93 to 1994-95 the Government are spending £5½ billion on providing an estimated 179,000 housing association homes to meet a range of housing needs.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has for homelessness in 1992 and 1993; and what were the comparable figures at the most recent available date.

Sir George Young: The number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities in England in 1993 was an estimated 134,190, a reduction of some 8,700 —6·1 per cent.—on the corresponding figure in 1992 of 142,890 acceptances.

The latest available figures show a continuation of the downward trend with 131,790 acceptances in the year ending March 1994. This is the eighth successive quarter in which total acceptances in the preceding 12 months have fallen.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of resources his Department provides to housing associations for helping homeless people.

Sir George Young: My Department provides funding through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for housing associations to provide homes for homeless people and others in housing need. In 1994-95 the Housing Corporation's ADP budget is some £1·5 billion and the corporation estimates that this will enable housing associations to provide some 58,300 new lettings of which nearly 38,000—some 65 per cent—are intended by associations to be for homeless people. This would bring the total number of homes provided by housing associations between 1992-93 and 1994-95 to some 178,000. In addition the Department provides revenue support through the Housing Corporation for housing association schemes which provide accommodation for people with special needs, many of whom are single and homeless. In 1994-95 the corporation's revenue contributions are expected to be some £128 million.

Under the Government's six-year—1990-91 to 1995-96 —rough sleepers initiative, funding of £182 million has been made available to provide emergency shelters, night shelters, hostels, properties leased from private sector landlords and at least 3,300 bedspaces in permanent move-on accommodation for people who would otherwise sleep rough in central London. The bulk of this funding has been made available to housing associations through the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet housing associations and local authorities to co-ordinate a strategy for helping homeless people.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce shortly the Government's conclusions following consideration of the responses to our consultation paper "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies", which proposed a new approach to homelessness. We should then be happy to discuss our intentions with local authority and housing association representatives.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met housing associations to discuss homelessness.

Sir George Young: Ministers and officials in the Department are in frequent contact with the National Federation of Housing Associations, and with individual housing associations, about a range of topics, including homelessness. My officials met representatives of the National Federation of Housing Associations on 6 June to discuss the Government's proposals to reform the homelessness legislation.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent figures he has for the numbers of people (a) living in hostels, (b) living in hotels provided at the expense of local authorities and (c) living in housing association dwellings.

Sir George Young: The latest available figures are for 31 March 1994 and these show that of the households for which local authorities in England had accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation, or who were awaiting the outcome of inquiries, some 10,670 households were living in hostels and 4,930 in bed-and-breakfast hotels.

The latest available information on housing association dwellings relates to 31 March 1993 when a total of 686,700 households were in occupation.

Housing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent requests for resources he has had (a) from housing associations and (b) from organisations such as Coventry Cyrenians.

Sir George Young: My Department has received no recent requests for resources from individual housing associations. The distribution of the resources made available to registered housing associations for the provision of social housing, through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme, is informed by the housing needs index and local authorities' priority housing needs.

My Department received 270 applications for grant under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 for 1994-95 from voluntary sector organisations, including two from Coventry Cyrenians for schemes to assist single people in housing need.

Habitats Directive

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with other Departments about the impact of the EU habitats directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Government colleagues and I are collectively committed to the transposition of the directive into United Kingdom law. The draft implementing regulations are to be laid shortly. Government policy for achieving the aims of the directive in the United Kingdom is set out in the biodiversity action plan, published in January of this year. This sets out our strategy for nature conservation over the next 10 and 20 years.

Local Authority Leaseholds

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his proposals to tackle the problems faced by local authority leaseholders.

Sir George Young: I hope before the recess to lay an order introducing a scheme to help council leaseholders needing to move but unable to sell their flats bought under the right to buy because of mortgageability problems. Where leaseholders can buy a more suitable home from their local authority, the scheme will allow the council to take back the present flat in exchange, and to offset the right-to-buy price paid for it against the sale price of the exchange property. We will also be releasing shortly a discussion paper covering this and a number of other measures to help council leaseholders.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 100, what plans he has, apart from large-scale voluntary transfers, to introduce new initiatives or schemes designed to pass local authority housing stock to private sector interests; how many members of his or other Departments or offices are engaged in preparing policy papers on this matter; which of these options involve public subsidy; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Besides large scale voluntary transfer—LSVT—there are several ways in which local authority housing may be trasnferred to alternative landlords. Tenants are able to choose a new landlord under tenant's choice. Local authorities can transfer properties as they become vacant through trickle transfer; or with tenant agreement they can undertake a partial LSVT.

I am always keen to encourage local authorities to consider ways of increasing private investment in social housing. I answered the hon. Gentleman's question about staff numbers in my Department in my answer of 21 June. Officials in other Departments are involved as necessary. And, as I also said in my answer on 21 June, the Department is jointly funding a study with five urban authorities and the Housing Corporation to look into alternatives for the ownership and management of housing in urban and inner city areas. The study will consider the subsidy implications of these options, among other issues. It is due to report in the autumn.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Gummer: Publication of such reports will be considered on a case-by-case basis, having regard to the code of practice on open government.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the work force in each local authority area in South Yorkshire is in part-time employment.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

The latest estimate from the labour force survey is that in South Yorkshire in Winter 1993-94 (December 1993—February 1994), 27 per cent. of those in employment were working part-time.

Comparable information is not available for local authority areas.

EDUCATION

Under-fives Provision

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the reasons for the different levels of funding between local authorities for provision for the under-fives.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for local authorities to determine their own priorities between and within services. The different levels of funding between local authorities on under-fives reflects those different priorities.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will allow local education authorities to spend more on the under-fives.

Mr. Robin Squire: Within general spending constraints, local authorities are free to determine their own expenditure on under-fives.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the criteria for establishing that a local education authority has underspent on the provision for the under-fives.

Mr. Robin Squire: A notional allowance for under-fives provision is made in each authority's education standard spending assessment, based on its resident under-fives population. How local authorities use that notional allowance is a matter for the discretion of each local authority. Neither education SSAs nor the sub-blocks within them are spending targets.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to make the provision of funding for the under-fives dependent on the number of under-fives in school.

Mr. Robin Squire: The level and nature of provision for under-fives is a matter for the discretion of each local education authority. A notional allowance to support such provision is made in each authority's education standard spending assessment, based on its resident under-fives population. There are no current proposals to change the basis, although standard spending assessments are reviewed each year.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it is his policy that the weighting factors in the standard spending assessments in respect of education are a reflection of his educational policies and priorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. Since education standard spending assessments are not prescriptive the weighting factors within them reflect the latest available objective information about relative variations in the cost incurred by local education authorities in providing a standard level of service.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the factors taken into account in setting the standard spending assessments for education spending.

Mr. Robin Squire: Each local education authority's standard spending assessment is calculated on the basis of its relevant pupil and population numbers, adjusted to allow for local variations in the cost of providing a standard level of service. Adjustments are made to reflect the additional local costs of provision for pupils with additional educational needs, provision of education in sparsely populated areas, free school meals and the high labour and other costs in London and the south east.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the policy adopted by his Department towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Forth: The Department considers publication of external consultants' reports on a case-by-case basis, having regard to the code of practice on access to government information. Factors taken into account include the need to protect private and sensitive commercial information relating to third parties.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure by the Department on consultancy fees in relation to market testing since September 1992 amounts to £296,210.

Teachers, Newham

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teaching staff and non-teaching staff were employed by the Newham local education authority on (a) a full-time basis and (b) a part-time basis for each year since 1988.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the numbers of teaching and non-teaching staff is collected from local education authorities by the local government management board on behalf of the joint staffing watch group. The following data was supplied by the Newham education authority and shows the numbers of teaching staff and other education staff employed for the years 1988 to 1994. It is not possible to separate these between staff employed in schools and those employed elsewhere.

	Teachers and lecturers		Education—Other
March	Full-time	Part-time	Full-time	Part-time
1988	2,697	338	1,146	1,866
1989	2,462	265	1,288	1,961
1990	2,500	677	1,404	1,218

1993	2,288	198	855	853
1994	2,043	157	805	867

Notes:

1. The table covers all staff in the LEA maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools, special and further education sectors and central administration. Staff employed by self-governing—GM—schools are not included. The 1994 figures exclude colleges which transferred to the new FE sector in April 1993.
2. "Education—other" includes educational support, clerical, school meals and premises related staff employed in schools and colleges, together with central services and administration within the education service.

Student Loans

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how frequently he meets the management of the body running the student loan scheme.

Mr. Boswell: On my right hon. Friend's behalf, I have met members of the board and management of the Student Loans Company on a number of occasions.

Mature Students

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students aged 50 years or over have enrolled on full-time higher education courses in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The numbers of United Kingdom domiciled new entrant higher education students in England aged 50 or over studying undergraduate courses for the past five years are set out in the table.

Year	Number
1988-89	1,184
1989-90	1,019
1990-91	1,321
1991-92	1,521

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the procedure by which a young person under the age of 16 years would be issued with a national insurance number.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the issue of national insurance numbers is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 28 June 1994:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I have been asked to reply to your question about the procedure by which a young person under the age of 16 years would be issued with a National Insurance number (NINO).

The Agency has an automatic system which is designed to provide young people with details of their NINO before they reach age 16. The system uses the information held on the Department's Child Benefit computer records and most young people whose parents are in receipt of Child Benefit are identified when they are between the ages of 15 years 2 months and 15 years 8 months. Just before their 16th birthday a plastic NI number card containing details of their name and NINO is issued to the young person. If the parent or guardian has a different surname from the young person, they are asked to confirm the name which is to appear on the NI number card before it is issued.

As Child Benefit is not generally paid for young people in the care of local government authorities, an arrangement exists whereby the young person's social worker can ask for a NI number card to be issued. This voluntary agreement avoids the need for the young person to attend a social security office in person.

Special arrangements are also in place for children of Her Majesty's Forces personnel serving abroad. As the payment of Child Benefit is usually undertaken by the employing service/department no record of the young person is held on the Child Benefit computer record. The young person's boarding school or their parents can therefore complete a form asking for their NI number card to be issued. The form is passed to the Agency via the relevant unit paymaster. Anyone who does not receive NI number cards in one of these ways must apply, in person, to their local social security office for a NINO on or after their 16th birthday.

I hope that this information will prove useful.

Pensions Watchdog

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking in respect of proposals by the Institute of Chartered Accountants on the power of his proposed pensions watchdog; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: We welcome the institute's comments which have been taken into account in our proposals for a new occupational pensions regulatory authority, set out in the White Paper "Security, Equality, Choice: The Future for Pensions". We will be consulting further with the institute and other interested parties in developing the new regulatory framework for occupational pension schemes.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when his Department received the letter from the hon. Member for Ilford, South sent to him on 28 March concerning the length of time taken by the Child Support Agency to respond to representations from hon. Members; when he replied to it; when it was forwarded to the Child Support Agency; and when the chief executive of the Child Support Agency replied to it;

(2) when he will reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Ilford, South on 28 March;

(3) if he will publish the text of the reply dated 20 June from the chief executive of the Child Support Agency in response to the letter of 28 March from the hon. Member for Ilford, South to him.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State received the letter on 31 March. As the letter concerned the operations of the Child Support Agency, it was transferred to the agency on 13 April for reply by the chief executive. I wrote to the hon. Member on 5 May to acknowledge receipt of his letter, and confirming the transfer of the letter to the chief executive. I understand that the chief executive replied on 20 June as follows:

"Thank you for your letter of 28 March to Peter Lilley who has asked me to reply. I am sorry for the delay in making my reply.

All letters from Members of Parliament addressed to me are acknowledged and I aim to respond within an average of 20 working days. Recent press interest has stimulated a great deal of correspondence from constituents and although that target is not being met at the moment, the necessary steps are being taken to ensure that correspondence from Members will be answered as soon as possible.

I hope my letter explains the posiition."

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the length of time taken by the Child Support Agency to reply to letters from hon. Members; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what guidelines have been issued to the Child Support Agency as to the time scale for replying to letters from hon. Members; and in what percentage of cases the Child Support Agency has met those guidelines.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency has a target to reply in full to a letter from an hon. Member within an average of 20 working days.

I recognise that the target has been met only in some 13 per cent. of cases and unacceptable delays have occurred. The agency has taken a number of measures to improve performance in this area. These include additional staff resources and improved processing arrangements.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether it is his policy to refer all letters from hon. Members concerning delay in replying to letters by the Child Support Agency for reply by the Child Support Agency itself.

Mr. Burt: Ministers see all correspondence from hon. Members relating to social security matters. However, where queries relate to operational matters dealt with by executive agencies, including the Child Support Agency, Ministers may refer them to the appropriate chief executive to reply. The chief executive has responsibility for operational issues and it is for the authority to take remedial action where necessary.

Social Security Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the grounds for the Benefits Agency to appeal against a decision of the social security appeal tribunal to the Social Security Commissioner; and how long, on average, this process takes from the date of the appeal tribunal's decision.

Mr. Burt: Appeals against a decision of a social security appeal tribunal are made by adjudication officers based at the central adjudication services. An appeal can be made only on the basis of a point of law. It is not possible to provide the information on how long this process takes as figures do not distinguish between appeals by adjudication officers and others.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long, on average, appeals to the social security appeal tribunal take to be heard from the date they are lodged.

Mr. Burt: The average length of time from lodgement of appeal to the date of hearing before a social security appeal tribunal in the quarter ending December 1993 was 28·4 weeks.

Income Support

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what mechanisms there are for providing temporary financial support to those engaged in the social security appeals procedure over their entitlement to income support.

Mr. Burt: Where it is thought a person is, or may be entitled to benefit, payments on account of that benefit may be made until the appeal has been decided. Possible hardship to the claimant would be considered where my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, is considering suspension of an appeal tribunal award whilst an appeal to the commissioner is awaiting hearing. Social fund crisis loans may also be available.

Vaccine-damaged Children

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of surviving children suffering from vaccine damage as defined by the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979; and how much each child has received under the Act.

Mr. Hague: Since follow-up records are not kept after a vaccine-damage payment has been made, no information is available as to the numbers of surviving vaccine-damaged children.

Black Postcards

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many black postcards were received at 10 Downing Street on and after 16 June.

Mr. Burt: Eight thousand, five hundred and fifteen postcards have been received since 16 June.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Hague: External consultants are engaged by the Department to support in-house teams in constructing their bids and to advise and support client side teams in devising contract strategies. Reports are therefore commercial in confidence and not for publication.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Hague: The information is as follows:

Year	£
1992-93	1,400,094
1993-94	4,261,909

Campaigns

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what limitations are placed on political campaigning by individuals employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his reply, 14 June 1994, columns 362-63]: The information provided contained a typing error. The restrictions described in the second paragraph apply to higher executive officers (D), not higher executive officers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Palestine

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on agreements made between the Palestinian water authority and the settler community about the fair use of water.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Gaza-Jericho agreement provides for the Palestinian authority to manage water, with the exception of that for settlements and military installations. This will continue to be managed by Merekoth Water Company, in accordance with existing quantities of drinking water and agricultural water. Israel and the Palestinians are also to establish a subcommittee to deal with this issue.

Hebron (International Presence)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the temporary international presence in Hebron; and whether the representatives have been given full co-operation by both the Israeli and Palestinian authorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our Consulate-General in Jerusalem is in touch with the officer in charge of the temporary international presence in Hebron. It has built up a working relationship with both parties, including regular meetings.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what change there has been recently in the level of Serb military activity on the border with the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and what has been the response of the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: We understand that the Yugoslav army has established an observation post in an area where the border between Serbia and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia is not clearly defined. The United Nations does not regard this as a serious incident and has not alerted member states to any significant change in the pattern of military activity along the border between the two states. UNPROFOR continues to monitor the situation.

Peacekeeping Operations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much in cash terms and constant prices the Government spent in 1980, 1990, 1991 and 1992 on peace operations in developing countries, involving British military personnel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British military personnel were not involved in any peacekeeping operations in 1980.

The MOD costs for British military personnel participating in peacekeeping operations in developing countries for 1990, 1991 and 1992 were as follows—constant prices in brackets.

	1990	1991 (£ million)	1992 (£ million)

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament;

(2) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them;

(3) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(4) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government;

(5) if he will list the advisory bodies he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993";

(6) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the request made on 6 June by the Financial Times to obtain details of decisions taken by qualified majority vote at the Foreign Affairs, Internal Market, Social Affairs and Agriculture Councils since 1989, submitted under the provisions of the EU code of conduct on public access to information.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The request by the Financial Times for information on voting records under the code of conduct on access to documents is being considered by the Council. The United Kingdom is arguing that the response to the Financial Times should be as helpful as possible.

North Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to respond to the letter on nuclear proliferation in North Korea and Trident submitted to him by the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, Greenpeace and the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on 15 June; and if he will place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I wrote to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent on 24 June in response to his letter of 15 June. A copy of my reply has been placed in the Library of the House.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent British commercial interests have been affected by ethnic clashes in the Rift Valley in Kenya; and what representations he has made on this matter.

Mr. Goodlad: Inter-ethnic fighting in Rift Valley province over the past two-and-a-half years has had limited effect on British commercial interests there. We have consistently made clear to the Kenyan Government over this period our concern at the political, economic and social dislocation caused by the fighting; and our view that it is the prime responsibility of every Government to provide security for their citizens, and to implement long term solutions.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO's general policy is not to publish consultants' reports in relation to market testing but specific requests for information would be considered on merit in line with the Department's policy on open government.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Goodlad: The total costs are as follows:

Financial year 1992-93	22,913
Financial year 1993-94	129,553
Total	152,466

Castlemartin Army Range

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the purpose of the destruction of British tanks and armoured cars at Castlemartin army range on 20 to 25 June.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A total of 37 tanks and 12 armoured combat vehicles were destroyed at the Castlemartin range in order to comply with the United Kingdom's obligations as a state party to the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty. The treaty, which all NATO and former Warsaw pact countries have ratified, is aimed at reducing the possibility of war in Europe and required signatories to reducing numbers of heavy weapons to much lower levels by the end of 1995. In total the United Kingdom is committed to destroying 183 tanks, 30 armoured combat vehicles and four combat helicopters. In comparison the Russian Federation, which has by far the largest reduction liability, will destroy over 3,000 tanks, 5,500 armoured cars, 660 pieces of artillery, 99 helicopters and more than 1,000 combat aircraft.

Arms Reduction

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress the former Warsaw pact countries are making in achieving the arms reduction targets set by the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the terms of the treaty, NATO and the countries of the former Warsaw pact have from July 1992 until November 1995 to meet their reduction obligations. To date over 20,000 items have been destroyed, 65 per cent. of them by the former Warsaw pact countries, including 4,409 tanks; 5,970 armoured vehicles; 25 helicopters; 713 combat aircraft; and 2,166 pieces of artillery. The total reduction liability of these countries is twice that of NATO countries—a reflection of the former Warsaw pact's larger holdings of weapons.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being taken to ensure that former Warsaw pact countries are carrying out their obligations under the provisions of the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Monitoring of compliance with the treaty's provisions is carried out by international challenge inspections. It is NATO policy to witness all destruction events carried out by former Warsaw pact countries. For the United Kingdom, this is conducted by the joint arms control implementation group—JACIG. Since the reduction period began in 1992, JACIG has led 46 missions to reduction sites in Eastern Europe and the countries of the former Soviet Union, where 67 per cent. of all destructions will take place. As a result of these and similar inspections carried out by other NATO countries we believe that all state parties are currently in compliance with their treaty obligations.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, following the European Court of Justice's Surinder Singh judgment in July 1992, he will refund fees to those persons who have been eligible for gratis visas had the European Court of Justice ruling existed at the time the fees were paid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes. My Department will consider written applications for a refund of fees from those non-European Union nationals who paid a fee before July 1992 for the visa granted them to enter the United Kingdom with their British citizen spouse who had been working in another member state of the European Union. The amount which may be refunded will be between £7 and £100 and be made up of the value of the fee plus an ex gratia sum in recognition of the time since the fee was paid. Applicants will be asked to provide evidence to support their claim.

Italy

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the new Italian Government about their decision to subsidise steel plants in Brescia.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have been asked to reply.

I met the Italian Minister for Industry, Senor Gnutti on 6 June and reiterated the concerns of the United Kingdom Government and steel industry about the proposed aid to the Bresciani. The proposal was discussed at the Industry Council on 22 June, as I reported in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) on 28 June, Official Report, column 467.

WALES

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 866, how many more nature conservation orders he has granted or refused under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales; how many are still in force; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. The two nature conservation orders reported in February are still in place.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 153, how many further prosecutions have been taken under sections 28 or 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Assisted Area Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many assisted area status grant applications from companies in Wales in each of the years since 1983 have translated into firm projects, with the numbers and amounts of the grants given and the number of jobs created; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The data are not available in the form requested. Information relating to regional assistance is published each year in the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual reports. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Employees

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each district council, county council and for Wales as a whole, for the latest available date, the average earnings of local government employees.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the earnings of employees in local government is available from the "New Earnings Survey", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

A55

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the provision of hard shoulder facilities on the A55 in Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The A55 in Clwyd is an all-purpose dual two-lane trunk road which is not normally provided with hard shoulders. The operational characteristics of all trunk roads are kept under review and improvements are made only when justified.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the emergency telephone provision on the A55 in Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The emergency telephone assessment undertaken by the highways directorate of the Welsh Office highlighted the requirement for 19 emergency telephones on trunk roads within Clwyd. Ten of these are on the A55 and they will be the first to be installed under phase 1 of the contract, commencing in August 1994.

The remaining nine installations will be undertaken during subsequent phases of the contract.

Public Bodies

Mr. Rod Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make available the recommendations of the efficiency scrutiny of the sponsorship of non-departmental public bodies in Wales, and his response to them.

Mr. Redwood: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the report's recommendations and my response, in the form of an action plan for their implementation.

Roads

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs currently created on road schemes in the Merthyr borough and Rhymney district; and how many of these are local employees;

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs created by his Department's current road schemes within each county of Wales; and what is his estimate of the number of Welsh employees on those schemes.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not available.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Creation and Training Programmes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research he has commissioned examining the outcome and effectiveness in terms of jobs gained and qualifications awarded of each job creation and training programme run by his Department since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: Regular surveys have been carried out in connection with the main employment and training programmes run by my Department since 1979. These have provided information on the number of participants who have found jobs since leaving the programme and, where appropriate, on the numbers who have achieved a qualification. More detailed research has been carried out periodically to compare employment rates amongst ex-participants with those amongst a group of non-participants. The results of the current regular surveys for training for work and youth training are published each month in the Employment Gazette.

Television and Radio

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people there are employed in television and radio broadcasting in the United Kingdom; and how many of these are employed directly or indirectly by the BBC.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest reliable information is from the 1991 census of employment. The most detailed data available covers radio and television services and theatres—code 9741 from the 1980 standard industrial classification. In September 1991, there were 75,800 jobs in this activity in the United Kingdom.

The Statistics of Trade Act 1947 prohibits the disclosure of information about individual employers. I cannot, therefore provide the information requested about the BBC.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with his colleagues on increasing the funding of TECs.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has discussed the funding of training and enterprise councils with Cabinet colleagues in the course of negotiations for the public expenditure survey.

The amount of funding TECs will receive in 1995-96 will be announced following my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer's unified Budget statement.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the policy adopted by his Department towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consultants offer advice on operational aspects of market testing. This is commercially sensitive and is not published.

TREASURY

Government Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table indicating how much central Government expenditure was spent in (a) England, (b) Northern Ireland, (c) Scotland and (d) Wales for the most recent available year, both in total money terms and on expenditure per capita.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows central Government expenditure which can be identified from official records as having been incurred on behalf of the population of England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales. The information given is consistent with that published in tables 7.6 A and B of "Public Expenditure, Statistical Supplement to the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95" (Cm 2519).

£ million

	Cash	Per capita
England	104,678	2,171
Scotland	13,448	2,633
Wales	7,369	2,549
Northern Ireland	7,135	4,475
United Kingdom	132,630	2,295

Barclays Bank

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement following the United States Supreme Court decision on Barclays bank.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. and learned Friend and I were naturally disappointed by the Supreme Court's decision on the Barclays case. The Government have always strongly opposed the imposition of world-wide unitary tax on United Kingdom-owned companies and supported Barclays throughout this litigation.

As my right hon. and learned Friend said last September, the legislation passed by California to modify its tax law is a major step forward and it should ensure that in future no United Kingdom-owned company is exposed to damage there from the imposition of world-wide unitary tax. We will be following closely the detailed regulations and the practical implementation of this law. I share the concerns of British business that the details of the Californian legislation have not yet been fully implemented. Consequently, the United Kingdom will retain its retaliatory powers against the possibility that states might damage United Kingdom-owned companies at some time in the future.

My right hon. and learned Friend and I also welcome the clear commitment to the internationally accepted arm's-length principle which has been shown by the Federal Administration. We regard such support for the international consensus as of major importance in expanding trade and investment throughout the world.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: The following table gives the total value and number of contracts let by HM Treasury for 1991-92 and 1992-93 for the subject headings and companies requested. In this period no contracts were awarded to Arthur Andersen, Grant Thornton, Robson Rhodes and Pannell Kerr Forster. I regret information going back beyond this date can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table is not specifically broken down by company, as information given to this detail would breach our commercial-in-confidence rules.

Contracts let with the following companies: Coopers and Lybrand, KPMG Peat Marwick, Ernst and Young, Price Waterhouse and Touche Ross, during 1991-92 and 1992-93 were as follows:

Subject	1991-92		1992-93
	Number of contracts	Value (£ thousand)	Number of contracts	Value (£ thousand)
Privatisation	3	1,184	6	277
Market-testing	1	23	1	20

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his involvement with TECs.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. and learned Friend has no direct involvement with TECs. That is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment.

VAT Office, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount, above projected costs, it has cost to construct the value added tax office in Liverpool; what occupancy was originally planned for the building; how many staff are actually based there; how many and which staff commute from London to work in the office; who pays their travel costs; what is the total; how long they have been sustained; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: In October 1990 independent quantity surveyors estimated the construction costs of the VAT headquarters building in Liverpool at £25·1 million. The estimate was based on a sketch design and was at October 1990 prices. This price excludes land, professional fees, fixtures and fittings, furniture and VAT.

The main part of the final account for the construction has not yet been agreed by the contractor but the Department's project cost control quantity surveyors have prepared draft final accounts and advise that the construction costs will be within the estimate. Exact figures cannot, at this stage, be given for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

The planned occupancy specified in the building brief prepared by Customs and Excise was 1,775.

Currently there are 752 staff based in the building. A further 39 posts are scheduled to be relocated from Southend by December 1994, but much of the work involved will be absorbed by existing staff who would otherwise be surplus. Four hundred and ninety Customs regional HQ and operational staff will move into the building in September 1994. This creates a need to provide space for facilities for public callers, VAT traders and shipping agents from September 1994.

The space not required by Customs has been re-allocated to the Charity Commission by Property Holdings, the managers of the Government's estate. The Charity Commission intends to move 236 staff into the building in November 1994. There are no staff who commute from London to work in the office.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Nelson: Reports by external consultants in relation to market testing constitute advice to the management of the Department and are not published.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Nelson: Expenditure by Her Majesty's Treasury to date on fees to external consultants for work related to market testing amounts to £136,461.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the Government's objective in raising the real exchange rate against the ecu above the February 1993 level; and what assessment he has made of the effect this has had on (a) the profitability of manufacturing in the United Kingdom and (b) exports of manufactures to the EEC;

(2) what was the nominal exchange rate against the ecu in (a) August 1992, (b) February 1993 and (c) June 1994;

(3) what was the percentage increase in the nominal exchange rate against the ecu between February 1993 and January 1994; and what is his estimate of the effect of the increase on the volume of (a) imports and (b) exports of manufactures to the EC.

(4) what account the Government's policy on the rate of exchange against the ecu takes of the United Kingdom share of the market for manufactures in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the EC.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 28 June 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 March 1994, Official Report, column 15, which provides a reference to data which can be used to calculate the sterling exchange rates and percentage change requested.

In the same answer I also made a statement about the role of the exchange rate in monetary policy. The Government have no objective to raise sterling's real exchange rate against the ecu.

The exchange rate is only one factor affecting the volume of imports and exports. It is difficult to isolate the effect of changes in the exchange rate from that of other factors, such as relative prices and activity in the United Kingdom and its trading partners.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on the rate of exchange of the pound sterling against the deutschmark.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 28 June 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 March 1994, Official Report, column 15.

HEALTH

Prednisone

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific guidelines and advice there are for patients concerning the prescription and the possible side effects of the synthetic corticosteroid Prednisone.

Mr. Sackville: It is important that patients taking corticosteroids do not abruptly stop taking the drug, as this may have serious consequences. This advice is provided to patients through steroid treatment cards which give clear guidance on the precautions to be taken. They also provide details of the prescriber, drug, dosage and duration of treatment. Steroid treatment cards are routinely given to patients taking systemic corticosteroids.

Information and advice on possible side effects are also available in patient information leaflets. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 2 December, Official Report, column 702. However, in the light of the recent recommendations of the Committee on Safety of Medicines regarding severe chickenpox in association with corticosteroids, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 12 May, Official Report, columns 216-17, product information for corticosteroids is being revised. All pharmaceutical companies manufacturing systemically administered corticosteroids have been approached and asked to revise or introduce patient information leaflets without waiting until renewal of the product licences.

Accidental Overdosing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of accidental overdosing of prescribed medication were reported in 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested.

Evening Primrose Oil

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has funded into the efficacy of evening primrose oil as a treatment for arthritis; in what circumstances evening primrose oil is available on prescription; if her Department intends to fund further research into the value of evening primrose oil for treatment of illness and disease; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly-based scientific proposals for research. Evening primrose oil is not available on prescription under the national health service.

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to devise a new national formula for allocating finance to district health authorities for hospital and community health services.

Mr. Sackville: A review of the weighted capitation formula is taking place.

Organophosphorus Insecticides

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations and research her Department is carrying out in respect of organophosphorous chemicals used in sheep dips, and those used as insecticides that were sprayed on the British armed forces during the Gulf war; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None. However, the Health and Safety Executive, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, has two on-going research projects involving organophosphorus sheep dips.

The Government receive independent scientific advice on the safety in use of sheep dips containing organophosphorus and other compounds from the Statutory Veterinary Products Committee. Following a review last year of the result of research they advised that organophosphorus sheep dips could continue to be marketed. In particular, they found no firm scientific evidence to support the association of chronic ill-health with exposure. Nevertheless, they recommended measures to reduce exposure to the dips and that further investigations be undertaken.

Earlier this year, the medical and scientific panel was set up as a sub-committee of the Veterinary Products Committee to evaluate current research, advise on additional work, advise on the suitability of projects submitted, and to report to the Veterinary Products Committee.

The medical effects of a large over-exposure to organophosphorus insecticides or sheep dips are well documented. Large over-exposures should not occur when the recommended precautions are taken.

The suggestion that organophosphorus insecticides were sprayed on the British armed forces during the Gulf War is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Dreadnought Seamen's Hospital

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost to date of maintaining the premises formerly occupied by the Dreadnought seamen's hospital in Greenwich, since they became vacant.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for South Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. William Wells, the chairman of the authority, for details.

Health Needs

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration will be given in the future, for the Croydon health authority district, to health needs as reflected by (a) infant mortality, (b) life expectancy at birth, (c) the number and proportion of single unmarried mothers and (d) the needs of ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Sackville: Croydon health authority, like all health authorities, is expected to plan to meet the health needs of all its residents. The hon. Member may wish to contact Adrienne Fresko, chairman of Croydon health authority, for details.

New Hospital Buildings

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effects of capital financing charges on the ability of health care providers to invest in new hospital buildings.

Mr. Sackville: The purpose of the capital charging system is to increase the awareness of health service managers of the cost of capital, to ensure that proposals for capital investment make best use of the resources available and to encourage both health care providers and purchasers to be innovative in planning health care delivery by considering alternatives to capital investment where appropriate. This has led to some providers reconsidering plans for new hospital buildings. There is no evidence that necessary capital investment is being constrained by the capital charging system.

Allergic Reactions to Medication

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of death caused by an allergic reaction to prescribed medication were reported in 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Cause of death data are not yet available for 1993.

Private Patients

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of whether, where NHS hospitals provide private treatment to patients, there is cross subsidy from NHS to private patients;

(2) what assessment she has made of whether, where NHS hospitals offer private treatment to patients, the treatment is at full cost which includes overhead depreciation and profit.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities and national health service trusts are already aware that they are expected to calculate NHS private patient charges on a commercial basis. Such charges must not be less than the full cost to the health authority or NHS trust including overheads and capital charges and must not involve any cross subsidy from NHS to private patients. This generates valuable income for improving services for all patients.

Aortic Aneurysms

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were attributed to aortic aneurysms in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement on the plans she has for screening programmes for this condition.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows deaths from aortic aneurysms in England and Wales for the last five years for which such figures are available.

	Number
1988	7,914
1989	8,251
1990	8,463
1991	8,703
1992	8,992

Figures supplied by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys.

The Department is interested in supporting research into the potential usefulness of screening for aortic aneurysm. It has been funding a pilot research project in the subject.

Gamma Hydroxy Butyrate

Mr Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effects of gamma hydroxy butyrate (a) when taken by people who have not been prescribed it and it and (b) when taken in quantity; what controls exist at present; and what controls she now intends to introduce on the availability of gamma hydroxy butyrate (i) other than by prescription and (ii) by mail order.

Mr. Sackville: The substance known as gamma hydroxy butyrate has anaesthetic and muscle relaxant properties and is regarded as a medicinal product as defined in section 130 of the Medicines Act 1968. It can have serious adverse effects, among which are: vomiting, drowsiness, vertigo, depressed breathing and heart rate.

Licences are required under the Medicines Act 1968 for the manufacture, sale or supply of this product. No such licences have been granted. Any person manufacturing, selling or supplying an unlicensed product is likely to be in breach of the Act and committing a criminal offence. Any breach of the Act is investigated by enforcement officers of the Medicines Control Agency. The existing controls in the Medicines Act are at present regarded as sufficient.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Sackville: The decision to disclose all or part of the information contained in external consultants' reports will be made on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by her Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Sackville: Since publication of the White Paper, "Competing for Quality", in November 1991, the total cost of consultants employed in connection with market testing programmes of the Department and its agencies is as follows:

April 1991 to March 1992	30,000
April 1992 to March 1993	370,000
April 1993 to March 1994 (latest figures held)	580,000

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from registered nurses, midwives and health visitors in relation to the registrar of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Sackville: None.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 417, regarding loans to national health service trusts, if she will itemise which trusts received loans or guarantees, and for what amount.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The information requested will be placed in the Library. The information is provided in tabular form and corrects that given on 17 May.

Trusts borrow principally to support their capital investment activities and all the borrowing detailed was within agreed limits whether or not the trust met its financial duties. Trusts also negotiate overdraft facilities with their bankers and the Department issues guarantees in support of these arrangements.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of the plans of Scottish Homes to dispose of its landlord responsibility over housing stock with particular reference to Paisley, South;

(2) when he last met the chairman of Scottish Homes to discuss the disposal of housing stock; what plans there are to dispose of high-rise property owned by Scottish Homes in the Paisley, South constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the chairman of Scottish Homes to discuss the disposal of its housing stock but he has issued guidance to Scottish Homes on this matter, following which it published procedures for the disposal of its stock.

In accordance with these procedures, Scottish Homes is preparing a local stock strategy in consultation with tenants and other interested parties, which will outline a time scale and provide a clear framework for the transfer of its stock, including high rise property, in the Renfrew district, which covers the Paisley, South constituency. It is expected that the strategy document will be published during July. Proposals to transfer must have the agreement of tenants after which they are subject to my right hon. Friend's approval.

Landlords (Neglect of Property)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory and discretionary powers are available to local authorities to take action against owner-occupiers and private landlords who fail to keep their property in reasonable sanitary condition; what special powers are available when the condition of the property or grounds of the property deteriorate into a state which is likely to cause nuisance to neighbours, damage to adjacent property or is a potential threat to an otherwise safe and healthy environment; if he has any plans to bring forward measures to tighten control of such situations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities may take action under the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897, the Building (Scotland) Act 1959, the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 to require the repair or up-grading of homes so that, for example, they have adequate sanitation. Powers relating to houses in multiple occupation are also contained in the 1987 Act. Specific powers are available for authorities to take action where neighbours are affected and there is provision to require the maintenance of private open spaces. There are no plans to amend those wide-ranging powers.

Defective Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given local authorities, housing associations and Scottish Homes on dealing with the structural defects of Orlit and Whitson-Fairhurst type houses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such advice has been given by my Department. However, information about approved repair schemes for defective house types is available from PRC Homes Ltd. A different scheme is required for each house type and, for some types, repair is either impractical or is not cost-effective. There is no approved repair scheme for the Whitson-Fairhurst and Orlit house types in Scotland. Where such a scheme does not exist, the defect cannot be dealt with, although in many cases the houses will continue to provide satisfactory accommodation for many years yet.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to bring forward additional measures to facilitate and assist local authorities, Scottish Homes, housing associations, co-operatives and owner-occupiers to deal with the structural defects of Orlit and Whitsun-Fairhurst type houses.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: No further measures are necessary. Local authorities and other housing agencies have been informed about defective house types, such as the Orlit and Whitson-Fairhurst, and how they may be dealt with. Resources totalling almost £426 million have been made available to local authorities for capital investment in public sector housing in 1994-95 and they are able to undertake work on defective housing in their own stock if they consider this to be a priority. Scottish Homes can also make similar provision. Local authorities who assist private owners eligible for repurchase of their home or reinstatement grant are given additional capital allocations which fully reflect the cost of that assistance.

Renfrew District Council

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing what the value of housing support grant to Renfrew district council would have been in each year since 1981, using the formulae applied in 1980-81 as a calculation index and uprating for inflation; what was actually paid to each local authority in each year of the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The housing support grant entitlement of any individual local authority is the product of a complex series of calculations to determine the difference between estimated aggregate eligible expenditure and estimated aggregate relevant income for all appropriate local authorities and its apportionment among authorities on the basis of distribution formulae agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

A re-calculation of the housing support grant entitlements of Renfrew district council since 1981 on the basis of the formulae which applied to the 1980-81 grant settlement could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

The actual grant entitlements of individual local authorities since 1980-81 are shown in the table. Over the period, it has been the Government's policy to move away from indiscriminate housing subsidies, such as housing support grant, in favour of targeting assistance on tenants in greatest need through the housing benefit system.

Angling

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the levels of fish population in the River Black Cart and the River White Cart; what plans he has to encourage the development of angling on these rivers; and if he will meet representatives of the angling community to discuss potential initiatives.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government have no records of the levels of fish populations on either the River Black Cart or White Cart but I am glad to note that in the last few years salmon have been returning to those waters. Although the development of angling is principally for individual fishery owners or angling clubs, my Department has provided them with scientific advice on a number of matters. I meet representatives of salmon and freshwater fisheries interests when it is appropriate to do so.

Paisley (Movement of Residents)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the movement or migration of residents from the Ferguslie Park partnership area to the Foxbar Rivers area of Paisley since the launch of the Scottish Office led initiative; what has been the expenditure in (a) capital and (b) revenue terms in each area during that period; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has made no estimate of the movement of residents from the Ferguslie Park partnership area to the Foxbar, Rivers area of Paisley. Full information on public expenditure in Ferguslie Park and Foxbar, Rivers since the launch of the Ferguslie Park Partnership is not available. The following tables summarise available information. In all tables "n.a." indicates "not available".

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all contracts for waste disposal, waste management, cleansing and refuse collection which have been let to private contractors by Scottish local authorities in each of the last five years and in each case showing which company has been awarded the contract and the location of the main headquarters of the company in each case.

Sir Hector Monro: This information is not routinely collected centrally and only partial data are available for 1989, 1990 and 1991. This is listed in the following table. There is no information for 1992 and 1993.

Women's Centre, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) capital and (b) revenue expenditure committed to the development of the women's centre in the Rivers area of Foxbar, Paisley, from urban programme, local authority and other sources; and if he will make a statement on this initiative.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Urban programme grant of £172,386 for capital costs and, for four years, £94,308 per annum for current costs, was approved on 7 September 1992. The sponsoring local authority, Strathclyde regional council, meets 25 per cent. of those amounts; 75 per cent. is met by the Scottish Office. I have no information about financial assistance from other sources.

Partnership Initiative, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will launch a partnership in the Foxbar, Rivers area of Paisley on a similar basis to that which exists in Ferguslie Park; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Decisions on the future direction of urban regeneration policy in Scotland and on the possible designation of future initiative areas will be taken in the light of the policy review which is currently under way. This review is taking account of the wide range of views expressed in response to the Scottish Office consultation paper, "Progress in Partnership".

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most up-to-date estimate of the population of Ferguslie Park, Paisley in each year since 1988; what was the population of the area when the Ferguslie Park initiative was launched; what is his best estimate of the number of people resident in the area at that time who are still resident there; what evaluation he has undertaken of the residential ingress and egress of people from the area over that period; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the population of Ferguslie Park since the Ferguslie Park partnership was launched in 1988 is available from two sources. A sample household survey commissioned by the Scottish Office in 1988, shortly after the partnership was formed, estimated the population to be 5,005. The 1991 census of population showed that the population in April of that year was 4,657. No estimate has yet been made of the number of people resident in the area at the time that the partnership was launched who are still resident there. However, a recently completed repeat sample household survey will shortly yield some information on this topic and on the characteristics of households moving into the area since 1988. This survey will also provide a 1993 estimate of population. No attempt has been made to survey households who have left the area since 1988.

Appointments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) name, (b) appointment and (c) salary, allowance, honorarium or other payment of each person resident within the area of Eastwood district council and the Barrhead regional division, including Neilson and Uplawmoor, who has been appointed to any position by him or any of his Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The addresses of appointees are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Women's Centre, Hunterhill

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's policy in relation to the development of a women's centre in the Hunterhill area of Paisley on a similar basis to that provided in the Rivers area of Foxbar.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Foxbar, Rivers womens centre was provided through the urban programme. Should an application for a similar facility be submitted for the Hunterhill area of Paisley it will be considered against the eligibility criteria and priorities of the urban programme.

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent estimate of the number of Scottish houses owned by (a) local authorities, (b) Scottish Homes, (c) housing associations, (d) private landlords, (e) co-operatives and (f) other tenure types which are affected by rising and penetrating damp, and rising and penetrating dampness and condensation; how long, at current rates of expenditure, it will take to eliminate these problems; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information about the condition of the housing stock in Scotland is contained in the report of the first Scottish house condition survey, produced by Scottish Homes and published in 1993. It gives details of the number of houses affected by rising or penetrating damp and suffering from dampness and condensation. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

It is not possible to determine how long it will take to deal with those problems. The responsibility for improving houses in the private sector rests with their owners and improvement grant is available to assist them. Local authorities, Scottish Homes, housing associations and other agencies have responsibility for their own stock and must deal with these problems within the resources available to them.

Condensation and dampness have been identified as national priorities for the use of resources and local authorities have been asked to prepare strategies for dealing with these problems and to set output targets against which to measure their performance.

Johnstone North Industrial Improvement Area

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make further funds available to the Johnstone north industrial improvement area; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Urban programme funds of £25,000 per annum have been made available from 1988-89 to 1994-95 for improvements to properties in the Johnstone north industrial improvement area. It is for Renfrew district council, the sponsoring local authority, to consider whether it wishes to apply for further funds.

Mental Health

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evaluation he has made of the success of the after-care tasks initiative—ACTIVE—run by Renfrew district council for mental health; if he will provide additional mainline or urban programme funding to enable ACTIVE to develop further its services and programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has not evaluated the work of the aftercare tasks initiative project. However, based on an evaluation by Strathclyde regional council of the project's first four years of urban programme-funded operations, we have recently approved a further three years' urban programme grant of £75,770 per annum. It would be for Strathclyde regional council to consider whether additional mainline or urban programme funding would be appropriate.

Next Steps Agency Initiatives

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's plans in relation to next steps agency initiatives for (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996.

Mr. Lang: I am now responsible for eight next steps executive agencies. The latest of these, the Student Awards Agency for Scotland, was launched on 5 April 1994. It is Government policy that all agencies should be reviewed some three years after their launch. I announced on 28 April 1994 that, following such a review, agency status should continue for the Registers of Scotland. The reviews of Historic Scotland and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency are nearing completion and I hope to make an announcement shortly on the outcome of those reviews. The triennial review of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency is due to be completed by April 1995 and those of the Scottish Office Pensions Agency, the Scottish Prison Service and Scottish Record Office by April 1996. I announced on 10 May 1994 that the Scottish Court Service, part of the Scottish Courts Administration, will be established as an executive agency from 3 April 1995. I have also announced previously that the Fisheries Research Services and the Roads Directorate are under consideration for executive agency status. I will make an announcement about their future in due course.

Contaminated Land

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of financial allocation made to Scottish Enterprise and the Glasgow development agency to deal specifically with clearing up contaminated land, in 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Stewart: The resources which my right hon. Friend allocates to Scottish Enterprise, and those which Scottish Enterprise allocates to the local enterprise companies, are allocated within expenditure blocks and not generally for a specific purpose or activity.

It is for Scottish Enterprise and the individual local enterprise companies to decide, in the context of the strategic and policy guidance given to them and within the overall resources allocated to them, the priority and resources to be devoted to a particular project or activity such as decontamination works.

Motorway Building Costs

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much, on average, it costs to construct a mile of motorway with lighting and signage at current prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average cost to construct a mile of motorway with lighting and signing, including land and preparation costs but excluding VAT at current prices is as follows:

Rural three-lane motorway: Approximately £6·8 million.
Urban two-lane motorway: Approximately £11 million.

The average cost for the rural three-lane motorway is based on the current A74 upgrading contracts where lighting was installed mainly at junction locations. Urban motorways can vary greatly in cost depending upon such factors as the remodelling of associated networks, urban fabric and land costs.

Flood Protection

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will use any powers available to him to assist with flood protection measures at Park avenue, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Under the Flood Prevention (Scotland) Act 1961, powers to protect non-agricultural land from flooding rest with regional and islands councils. It is for Strathclyde regional council to determine the extent to which it will use these powers to protect any such land at Park avenue, Paisley. Flood prevention schemes made by councils and confirmed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State currently attract grant at the rate of 50 per cent. on the eligible costs.

Sandeel Fishing

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the numbers of Danish boats currently fishing for sandeels over traditional Fife fishing grounds.

Sir Hector Monro: Around 50 Danish sandeel vessels have been sighted in the North sea, some 20 to 40 miles east of the Fife coast. The sandeel fishery is highly seasonal and this activity is only expected to last between four and six weeks.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the tonnage of sandeels caught by Danish vessels over traditional Scottish fishing grounds in each of the last five years; and what was the value of the sandeels caught.

(2) what assessment he has made of the tonnage of sandeels caught by Danish vessels over the Wee bankie, the Cockenzie bank and the Marr bank in each of the last five years; and what was the value of the sandeels caught.

Sir Hector Monro: The following table shows sandeel catches taken by all nations in the western central North sea —an area extending from the Firth of Tay to Flamborough Head, extending roughly 120 miles into the North Sea. The 1993 figures will become available later this year. Separate figures are not readily available for Danish catches.

Year	Catch ('000 tonnes)	Average value per tonne £
1988	291·1	36
1989	228·3	39
1990	141·4	45
1991	228·2	48
1992	422·4	46

Source: International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (catches): Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department (value of catches).

The bulk of these catches were taken in the southern and eastern parts of the area. Estimated catch in the Marr bank, Wee bankie and Cockenzie bank was 60,000 tonnes in 1992.

Further Education College Lecturers

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future arrangements for the initial training of further education college lecturers in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In recent years, much has been done to raise the status and quality of further education in Scotland so that students have the opportunity to develop their skills and abilities through vocational as well as academic routes.

If FE students are to receive top-quality education, college lecturers must themselves be effectively trained to provide it. The kind of training that they receive has a significant bearing on the standards of education the public expect FE colleges to deliver. This is why the Government set up a review committee in May 1992 to consider and make recommendations on the future arrangements for the initial training of lecturers. The report of the review committee was published in September last year and has since been the subject of an extensive consultation exercise with representatives of the education sector.

The Government fully endorse the report's conclusions that lecturing staff in further education should be trained and qualified to the highest standards. In writing to the FE colleges about their development plans, before final decisions were reached on the report, Scottish Office Education Department officials stressed the desirability, in the interests of both colleges and lecturers, of continuing to support the teaching qualification (further education) course offered by the Scottish school of further education, which is now part of Strathclyde university. I am glad to say that there has been an encouraging response and an increase in the uptake of places on the course. Although we do not intend to make it compulsory for lecturers to undertake the course, we accept the report's recommendation that lecturers should be strongly encouraged to undertake the teaching qualification (further education) course and will continue to explore ways in which the recent increase in uptake can be sustained. The General Teaching Council for Scotland will also, of course, continue to accredit the TQ(FE) course for registration purposes and to encourage prospective lecturers to register, although, as recommended in the report, registration will continue to be a matter for individuals. Relationships between FE and schools will develop as a result of our "Higher Still" proposals and, since incorporation, a variety of FE/HE links have emerged. We accept, therefore, the report's recommendation that the issues of compulsory qualification and GTC registration should be reconsidered in a few years time in the light of these developments.

To ensure the effective implementation of the other recommendations in the report, we will establish a working group, with strong representation from the FE sector, to define FE training needs and competences, and to draw up national guidelines on which future TQ(FE) courses will be based. The working group, assisted by the short-term appointment of a consultant, will be asked to report by November 1994. In tandem with this exercise, the Scottish Office Education Department will, in conjunction with the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council, conduct an analysis of the costs of the current TQ(FE) course and consider costed options for its future funding. In the meantime, the existing TQ(FE) course will continue to be provided solely by the Scottish school of further education. The school will be invited to embody as many as possible of the Anderson committee recommendations into the course structure and content, and to collaborate with the colleges to ensure that it is stimulating, responsive and relevant.

Regional Enterprise Grant

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number and value of regional enterprise grants for (a) innovation and (b) investment and regional selective assistance awards for the Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy and North-East Fife travel-to-work areas for the year ended 1 August 1993.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The information requested is given in the table. North-East Fife TTWA was not classed as an assisted area in either the previous or current version of the assisted areas map.

Regional Enterprise Grants and Regional Selective Assistance Offers accepted 1 August 1992 to 31 July 1993

Travel-to-work area	Regional Innovation Grants		Regional Investment Grants		Regional Selective Assistance
	Number	Value (£)	Number	Value (£)	Number	Value (£)

Kirkcaldy	4	97,630	8	102,873	8	2,774,000

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the level of regional selective assistance grants and regional enterprise grants in Fife compared to the number and levels of grant offered.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The data from projects completed either successfully or otherwise in recent years have shown that, on average, 70 per cent. of the value of regional selective assistance offers accepted in Scotland was eventually paid. The comparable figure for regional enterprise grants was 75 per cent. Figures for individual regions will fluctuate around these levels.

Capital Investment

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the level of capital investment by manufacturing firms by local authority region and for Scotland over the last three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The information is set out in the following table. Figures are provided from the last three years for which information is available:

Woodlands

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing how many Forestry Commission woodlands have been sold to the private sector since 1980, or from whichever year figures are available; how many of these are subject to (a) voluntary and (b) legally binding access agreements; what is the total hectarage of these woodlands; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 June 1994]: Between July 1981, when the Forestry Commission's disposals programme started, and 31 March 1994, the Commission sold some 2,500 individual areas of forest land covering 105,000 hectares. Arrangements for securing continued public access to Forestry Commission woodlands, by way of prior agreements entered into between the Commission and local authorities, were introduced in October 1991. By 31 March 1994, the Commission had sold eight areas of forest land, covering 123 hectares, which are subject to legally binding access agreements. The Commission does not maintain records of the extent of voluntary public access allowed to woodlands sold without legally binding agreements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to support or promote the development of low or zero-emission vehicles for use in public transport services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department is collaborating with other Departments on a programme of field trials for alternative fuelled vehicles. For further details, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic on 28 June 1994, Official Report, columns 477-78.

Post Office

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, columns 324-25, where he has published his estimate of the effect of granting each specific request of the Post Office for greater commercial freedom, including its effect on (a) the current business and (b) projects of existing private firms.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have published no such estimates.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement clarifying the Government's position regarding the future of the postal service.

Mr. Heseltine: We will be publishing a Green Paper shortly.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) whether Parcelforce will retain its VAT exempt status once it is privatised;

(2) what services offered by (a) the Royal Mail and (b) Parcelforce which are currently zero-rated will attract VAT after privatisation;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 630, whether all the services at present offered by Parcelforce will retain their VAT zero-rating status after privatisation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The issue of VAT on postal services will be covered in the Green Paper on postal services, which will be published shortly.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether draft controls have been drawn up for privatisation of all or any part of the work done by the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No decision has yet been taken on whether work currently undertaken by the Insolvency Service should be contracted out to the private sector. No draft controls have been drawn up.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the conclusions of the current review into the Insolvency Service by Stoy Hayward on whether the private sector can beat the Insolvency Service for value for money.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Stoy Hayward is not due to complete its study until the end of July 1994.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much additional money is planned to be spent on the Insolvency Service in the financial year 1994-95.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The 1994-95 running cost provision to the Insolvency Service provides an additional £2·66 million compared with its 1993-94 expenditure.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of checks is being imposed on files in the Insolvency Service before they are closed; what staff are doing the checking; and on what length of contract they are employed.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All files are read by specialist, permanent staff before they are closed.

Competitiveness White Paper

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account was taken of the law of comparative costs in international trade and developing the proposals in his White Paper on competitiveness.

Mr. Sainsbury: As the White Paper on competitiveness makes it clear, the Government are committed to fair and open markets which provide a spur to enterprise and improved efficiency. This allows the United Kingdom to export those goods which it can produce most efficiently in line with the law of comparative costs.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to investigate the relationship between the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and major accountancy firms.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will initiate an inquiry into the role of British accountancy firms in money laundering in the case of AGIP.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: [holding answer 28 June 1994]: No. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has already investigated this matter.

Industrial Capacity

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing for each industry the estimated percentage utilisation of capacity in 1990 and the increase or decrease in output since 1990 at the latest available date, together with the estimated utilisation of capacity.

Mr. Sainsbury: Official data on capacity utilisation by industry are not available. The CBI industrial trends survey monitors changes in balances of companies reporting below capacity working, by industry groups. Industrial output figures are published in the monthly digest of statistics. Both publications are available in the Library of the House.

Electricity

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 231, if he will make a statement on the proposals for opening up the international market in electricity.

Mr. Eggar: The Government welcome the European Commission's proposals to liberalise the electricity market in the European Union. The European energy market must be opened up if costs are to be driven down and the competitiveness of European industry improved. The Government's objective is therefore to reach agreement on the Commission's proposals as soon as possible.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to encourage the electricity generating industry to buy from British suppliers.

Mr. Eggar: The electricity generating industry buys from competitive suppliers. The White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", Cm 2563, sets out the approach that the Government are taking to ensure that British suppliers maximise their competitiveness.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade under which sections of the Companies Acts the recognised supervisory bodies owe a duty of care to shareholders, creditors, employees, bank depositors and pension scheme members.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Companies Acts do not impose a statutory duty of care on the recognised supervisory bodies.

Gas Industry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what training his Department provided or funded for the Director General of Gas Supply prior to her appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Ms Spottiswoode was appointed as Director General designate one month before she took up post as Director General of Gas Supply on 1 November 1992, so that she could familiarise herself with the industry and with current issues. My Department was aware of her intention to attend a course on the gas industry before she took up her appointment but was not asked to contribute to the cost.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information was supplied to his Department during the appointment process by the Director General of Gas Supply concerning connection with the gas industry as called for in paragraph 14 of his job specification.

Mr. Eggar: Ms Spottiswoode's connections with the gas industry were made known to the Department both by the executive search consultants and by Ms Spottiswoode herself during the appointment process.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, further to his White paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", whether he considered the effect of movements on the exchange rate on competitiveness; and if he will publish his estimate of the amount by which labour productivity in manufacturing would have to rise to offset the increase in United Kingdom relative export prices compared with those of Germany since February 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: As the White Paper makes it clear, the Government believe that the United Kingdom's competitiveness depends on improving productivity and controlling costs.

Company Inspections

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has discussed conflicts of interests with the individuals appointed to act as inspectors to investigate company affairs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 13 April 1994, Official Report, column 229.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the individuals currently acting as inspectors under the provisions of the Companies Acts have any business connection with any accountancy and/or law firm criticised in reports by his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Three current Companies Act inspectors have business connections with accountancy firms which have been the subject of criticism in a published inspectors' report.

Steel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made as to the adequacy of the supply of home-produced or imported steel; and if he will publish a table showing (a) United Kingdom production, imports and net home disposals of steel in each month in 1989 and in this year to date, (b) the rate of return on capital required to make it profitable for United Kingdom steel manufacturers to invest in new capacity in the United Kingdom at current rates of exchange and (c) the actual rates of return on replacement and historic cost in 1993 generally and for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Estimates of the adequacy of steel supply are a matter for industry. The available figures of production, imports and net home disposals are published in the monthly digest of statistics—table 10.2—a copy of which is in the Library of the House. It is for companies to decide what rate of return is required to make investment in new capacity profitable. There are no official data on rates of return, but information may be available from commercial organisations that analyse company accounts.

British Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the number, standard and quality of those companies which have pre-qualified to buy the mining assets of British Coal; whether he has now invited further companies to make offers for those assets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In considering all applications to pre-qualify, DTI, in consultation with its advisers, took into account a range of factors, including the technical and commercial ability of applicants to manage regional coal companies and care and maintenance collieries, and the likely ability of the applicant to finance any bid they may tender. No further companies have been invited to make offers for the mining assets of the British Coal Corporation.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many prosecutions for the contravention of the Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations 1989 and the Pyramid Selling Schemes (Amendment) Regulations 1990 took place in 1993-94; and how many were successful.

Mr. McLoughlin: There were no such prosecutions in 1993-94.

Skills Shortages

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with (a) his Government colleagues, (b) employers' organisations and (c) the training and enterprise councils regarding the Price Waterhouse report on the west midlands economy with particular reference to skills shortages.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government office for the west midlands is aware of the Price Waterhouse report, which is one of a series on the west midlands economy. GOWM will be taking the report into account alongside others in discussions with TECs and representational bodies following publication of the White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to take new measures to deal with skills shortages in conjunction with his Government colleagues.

Mr. Sainsbury: The supply of skilled labour is one of the key competitiveness issues addressed in the Government's White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", Cm. 2563. New measures to be implemented over the next three years are outlined in the White Paper. Training is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing follows the code of practice on open government.

Receivers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation under which receivers would owe a duty of care to the unsecured creditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so.

Nuclear Safety Convention

Mr. Trend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made on proposals for an international nuclear safety convention.

Mr. Eggar: A convention on nuclear safety was agreed by more than 70 states at a diplomatic conference at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna on 17 June. It will be open for signature from 20 September and will enter into force after ratification by 22 states, including 17 states with at least one civil nuclear power plant.

The main objective of the convention is to achieve and maintain a high level of nuclear safety worldwide. Countries ratifying the convention will submit national reports, for discussion at periodic review meetings, on how they meet or intend to meet safety obligations established in the convention. The Government welcome the agreement on the convention text and hope that the states with civil nuclear powers plants will ratify the convention.

Carnon Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Coe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his Department's loans to Carnon Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Heseltine: I have today agreed to a conditional waiver of repayment of my Department's loans outstanding to Carnon Holdings Ltd.

Two loans were extended to the company, in 1986 and 1988, totalling £23·4 million, to safeguard employment at the company's South Crofty tin mine. When the loans were offered, independent forecasters were expecting that the tin price would recover; this would have permitted Carnon to trade profitably and hence repay the loans. However, the continuing low price of tin has meant that there is no longer any realistic prospect of repayment.

The waiving of repayment of the loans is dependent on two conditions: that the company succeeds, by the closing date of 4 August, in raising the "minimum subscription" set out in its prospectus to be published on 30 June; and that the House of Commons does not object to this waiver before the closing date.

The waiving of the debts is intended to permit Carnon the opportunity to raise fresh funding to continue its operations but my decision is not intended to imply any comment on or endorsement of the company's financial standing or position. Any potential investor must form his or her own judgment of the merits of investing on the basis of information supplied by Carnon.

Fire Safety

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Deregulation Bill construction task force;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to make any changes to the Fire Precautions Act 1971 until there has been a debate in the House; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of the recommendations of the Home Office fire safety division to the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill contruction task force;

(4) which fire service organisations and local authority organisations were consulted by the construction task force before it produced its recommendations regarding deregulation of fire safety regulations.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The recommendations of all seven business deregulation task forces were published on 19 January and copies were placed in the Library of the House. The working papers on which their recommendations were based were placed in the Library of the House on 30 March.

The construction industry task force held discussions with officials and Ministers in several Government Departments, including the Home Office. No discussions were held with fire service or local authority organisations because the nature of the task force exercise was to provide the Government with evidence of business concerns.

The fire safety review, announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 17 January, Official Report, column 381, explored issues identified by the task force and others. Publication of the report of this review was announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 22 June, Official Report, columns 228-29. The Government are committed to full consultation on the report with all interested parties and we have made it clear that no changes will be made to existing arrangements until these consultations are complete.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the recommendations of the construction industry deregulation task force; and if he will make a statement on the review of fire safety and enforcement carried out by the task force.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The recommendations of all seven business deregulation task forces were published on 19 January and copies were placed in the Library of the House. The working papers on which their recommendations were based were placed in the Library of the House on 30 March.

Publication of the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement was announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 22 June, Official Report, columns 228-29 and I have nothing further to add to his statement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Chain Letter Earnings Schemes

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action has been taken to facilitate tracing of promoters of chain letter earnings schemes; and what further measures he plans;

(2) what representations have been made to him regarding chain letter earnings schemes in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many complaints he has received with regard to participants who have suffered financially as a result of chain letter earnings schemes in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what action is being taken to increase the protection of the participant in chain letter earnings schemes;

(5) if he will make a statement on chain letter earnings schemes; and what steps he has taken to maximise the awareness of the possible offences that can be committed under these schemes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am replying because chain letters involving money-making schemes have in some cases been held by the courts to be illegal lotteries under provisions now contained in the Lotteries and Amusement Act 1976 because they have the overall object of distributing money by chance. The schemes are also subject to the general criminal law on theft and fraud, for the enforcement of which—including the tracing of suspected offenders—the police are responsible.

Whether a particular scheme is an illegal lottery is a matter which only a court could decide. The advice given to recipients of "get-rich-quick" schemes is to ignore their claims or, if they wish to take matters further, to pass offending materials to the police for consideration and possible investigation. Information on prosecutions under the 1976 Act involving chain letter schemes is not held centrally.

During 1993-94 the Home Office received seven letters from Members of Parliament on behalf of constituents and four letters from members of the public about chain letter schemes. None of the letters concerned participants who had suffered financially.

Gammahydroxybutyrate

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to propose to control the availability and promotion of gammahydroxybutyrate; and what assessment he has made, and on what basis, about the availability of gammahydroxybutyrate in England and Wales and its promotion on a commercial basis.

Mr. Maclean: Gammahydroxybutyrate—also known as GHB or GBH—is manufactured in the United States of America for use as an anaesthetic. It is not available as a licensed medicine in the United Kingdom but the manufacture, advertisement and sale of the substance fall within the scope of the Medicines Act 1968 as it has pharmacological effects.

We understand that the Medicines Control Agency, an agency of the Department of Health, is currently investigating its promotion and sale following recent press reports that the substance is being marketed in the United Kingdom. The maximum penalties on indictment for advertising, production and sale of an unlicensed medicine are two years imprisonment and/or a fine of £5,000.

Gammahydroxybutyrate has only recently emerged as a drug of misuse in the United Kingdom. We understand it has a stimulant effect if taken in small doses and that larger doses can cause vomiting, drowsiness, depressed breathing and heart rate. The first reported seizure of GHB was made in April this year using powers under the Medicines Act 1968.

There have been up to now only a few reports of gammahydroxybutyrate misuse and we have no plans at present to bring it under the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The key criterion for bringing a substance under the Act's controls is whether misuse of the substance has or is capable of having harmful effects sufficient to constitute a social problem. The position is being kept under review.

Escort and Custody Services

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are carried out by the police on applicants who apply for work at contracted-out prisons and for the contracted-out court escort service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 29 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the checks carried out by the police on applicants who apply for work at contracted out prisons and for the contracted court escort service.

In my letter of 22 June, Official Report, column 171, I referred to the routine enquiries that are made about all people who wish to work at contracted out prisons and for the contracted court escort service. These investigations are similar to those made in relation to applicants for Prison Service employment and include checks made by the police against records held in the Criminal Records Office. Candidates applying for employment in custodial duties and escort functions in both the public and the private sector are exempted from the provisions of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 by the Rehabilitation Act 1974 (Exceptions) Order 1975. Convictions which ordinarily are regarded as "spent" are therefore taken into account.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 169, how many grades of employee working in the court escort service in the Metropolitan police area there will be when Securicor takes over the contract; what will be the pay for each grade; and how the pay and grading compare with that of the current incumbents.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 29 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of grades of employee working in the court escort service in the Metropolitan Police area when Securicor takes over the contract; the pay for each grade and how the pay and grading compare with that of the current incumbents.

There are two basic uniformed grades, prisoner custody officers and supervisory prisoner custody officers, excluding the senior management and administration staff at Securicor's headquarters.

The core grades who are currently performing these duties are police constables and police sergeants, prison officers and senior prison officers.

The pay of prisoner custody officers is determined by the contractor concerned. Details are not held by the Prison Service and it is for the contractor to decide whether they should be made public.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A decision on whether to publish a particular report by external consultants in relation to market testing would be based on all the relevant circumstances, including any necessary commercial considerations.

Paedophile Unit

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are expected to be taken to enhance the effectiveness of the new paedophile unit at the National Criminal Intelligence Service in the context of the possible disbanding of the obscence publications branch at Scotland Yard.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No proposals about the future of the obscene publications branch have yet been made, but the Metropolitan police has given assurances that its work will continue whatever the recommendations of the current headquarters and specialist units' review.

The branch is an operational unit, responsible for the investigation of paedophile offences. The paedophile unit of the National Criminal Intelligence Service is a non-operational, national intelligence unit. The two units have different and distinct roles and it would not be appropriate for the National Criminal Intelligence Service to take on any operational functions from the branch.

Firearms Certificates

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been raised from the issue of firearms and shotgun certificates in each year since 1990 and in the current year to date; and when he expects to make an announcement of the outcome of discussions on the levy attached to firearm and shotgun certificates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following sums have been raised from the issue and renewal of firearm and shotgun certificates.

Year	£
1990	5,286,500
1991	5,130,200
1992	4,988,800

Figures are not yet available for 1993 or 1994. An announcement on the outcome of the current review of firearms fees will be made as soon as possible.

Secure Training Centres

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now name the fifth site for a secure training centre covering the London and south-east area.

Mr. Maclean: The centre will be located on Home Office land at Cookham wood in Kent adjacent to, but separate from, the Prison Service establishment.

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make draft rules for secure training centres available to the House.

Mr. Maclean: Rules for the regulation and management of secure training centres will be made by statutory instrument and, as such, will not be available in their final form until after the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill receives Royal Assent. However, in order to indicate to potential contractors what areas the rules will cover in order to assist them in formulating their tenders, an administrative paper has been prepared which outlines proposed rules for secure training centres. A copy of this paper has been placed in the Library today.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now publish details of the design and build specification of the proposed secure training centres for young offenders.

Mr. Maclean: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the design and build specification, together with an associated note to tenderers containing information on performance standards.

Criminal Offences (Charges)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in tabular form which actions have been made criminal offences by legislative changes for each year since 1979, giving details of the Act which brought about the change.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Firearms

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearm permits and shotgun certificates were issued in Wales in 1993; and what are the projected figures for 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A total of 2,976 firearms certificates were issued in Wales during 1992—701 new certificates and 2,275 renewals—and 20,481 shot gun certificates were issued—3,252 new certificates and 17,229 renewals.

Figures for 1993 are not yet available and it is not the practice to make projections for the future.

Police Cars

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilians have died in each of the last five years in accidents involving police cars.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The centrally available information relates to accidents where death to civilians has arisen in the course of either police pursuits or responses to emergency calls.

The figures for England and Wales are as follows:

Year	Civilian fatalities
1989	36
1990	23
1991	30
1992	28
1993	28

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the inclusion of section 11 funding into the single regeneration budget on metropolitan authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Existing commitments under section 11 will continue to the end of the approved project life. Thereafter, the allocation of funding under the single regeneration budget will be determined on the basis of applications reflecting local priorities, within the terms of the bidding guidance. The specific aims of the budget include initiatives intended to "enhance the employment prospects, education and skills of local people, particularly the young and those at a disadvantage, and promote equality of opportunity" and to "promote initiatives of benefit to ethnic minorities".

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many different individuals have been detained under the Immigration Act powers during the most recent 12-month period; and how many of them were (a) asylum seekers and (b) others.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1993, 10,530 people were detained overnight or longer under powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971.

These records do not distinguish between asylum seekers and others.

Drink Driving

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifiable offences of causing death by dangerous driving and causing death by careless driving while under the influence of alcohol or drugs there were in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993, when the criteria used to calculate the 1991 figures are applied.

Mr. Maclean: The offence of causing death by careless driving when under the influence of drugs or alcohol was created by the Road Traffic Act 1991. Since 1992 police forces have provided the Home Office with the number of offences of causing death by dangerous driving together with the number of offences of causing death by careless driving when under the influence of drugs or alcohol. These combined figures for 1992 and 1993 were published in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Notifiable Offences England and Wales 1993". It is not possible to ascertain what the numbers of offences would have been if the pre-1992 classification were still in place.

Combat 18

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the activities of Combat 18; and what plans he has to ban the organisation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government deplore the activities of any group which advocates violence. The police are well aware of the activities of Combat 18 and any alleged attacks or intimidation should be reported to them. There are no statutory powers to proscribe organisations in Great Britain other than in the special circumstances provided for in the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Arrests

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were arrested by the Metropolitan police each year from 1980 to 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the following table:

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much in cash terms and in constant prices the Government spent in 1980, 1990, 1991 and 1992 on the reception of asylum seekers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no formal reception arrangements for asylum seekers. They are entitled to a range of statutory benefits and services which are available to the rest of the population. The Government provide funding to voluntary organisations to advise and assist newly arrived asylum seekers, and to meet the costs of short term, emergency accommodation and maintenance for destitute asylum seekers before they gain access to the statutory system. Grants to voluntary organisations for this purpose for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92, and 1992-93 are set out in the table and taken at 1990 prices. No grants were made to assist the reception of asylum seekers in 1980.

1991-92	830,650	781,421

Commercial Vehicles (Accidents)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the verdicts of unlawful killing which have been recorded by coroners in relation to accidents involving (a) light goods vehicles and (b) PCVs over the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Elections

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will cause an inquiry to be undertaken, in cases where European law forbids the revelation of names and addresses of nominators of a candidate in European Union elections and where there are prima facia grounds for complaint, which could examine the bona fides of the nominators and investigate the background and political and financial connections of relevant candidates whose departure abroad makes them unavailable for questioning;

(2) if he will cite the precise European statute which prohibits (a) other candidates and (b) members of the public from having sight of candidates' nominators, their names and addresses, in an election to the European Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We know of no such European law. As is the case at parliamentary elections, at European parliamentary elections in the United Kingdom candidates and the elections agents, proposers and seconders of candidates may attend the proceedings and inspect the nomination papers during the period for delivery of nomination papers. The addresses of the proposer, seconder and assentors are not given on nomination papers, although their electoral numbers are given. The names of the persons nominating and seconding a candidate for election to the European Parliament are published in the statement of persons nominated.

UK Det. Services Ltd.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the contractors have defaulted on any part of the contract to manage Blakenhurst prison; what was the nature of the default on each occasion; and what was the penalty imposed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 June 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 29 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Blakenhurst prison.

Default notices have been issued against the contractors on two occasions and payment has been withheld on one occasion. Under the terms of the contract, a default notice may be issued if satisfactory progress has not been made within 20 days of a warning.

On the two occasions where default notices have been issued, the first related to security in cells and the second to maintenance. These problems were rectified satisfactorily. There are no default notices outstanding at present.

In the light of the incident on 24 February which occurred in one of the houseblocks, the Prison Service did not consider that UKDS fully delivered the required service during that month. During the incident, some parts of the prison were not fully in control, with consequent effects on regime delivery; and public relations and contingency arrangements were not satisfactory. The areas where the service was not considered to be up to the required standard were outlined in my letter of 12 April (Official Report, Column 3).

There was a financial penalty imposed, and the sum which was withheld from UKDS was £41,166·90, exclusive of VAT, which in our judgement represented the extent to which the required level of service had not been delivered in February.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the Home Office has given consent for United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. to alter the services provided under the terms of the contract to run Blakenhurst prison; and what alterations were made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 June 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 29 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of occasions on which consent has been given for United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. to alter the services provided under the terms of the contract to run Blakenhurst Prison; and what alterations were made.

It was agreed in May 1994 that United Kingdom Detention Services Ltd. could alter the contractual basis on which two of the services were provided. First, the number of hours out of cell was reduced from 15 to 14. Second, visiting arrangements were changed to take account of actual visiting patterns. As a result the visiting period has been changed from 13.00—21.00 to 13.00—20.00, and additional morning visits, particularly during school holidays, at Christmas and on other Bank Holidays, have been added.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

House of Commons

Mr. Walden: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the origins of the 10 o'clock rule in respect of business of the House; what assessment he has made to its suitability to current conditions; and what plans he has to change it.

Mr. Newton: The origins of the 10 o'clock rule lie in the 1880's. Following a report from the Select Committee on Parliamentary Procedure in 1886, William Smith, the then First Lord of the Treasury, proposed in 1888 a series of rules of procedure. The impetus for the regulation of the hours of the House resulted from a series of very late sittings in the previous sessions. The hours of sitting of the House have been regulated by Standing Order since 1888 to the present day, except during the period 1940-47 when they were regulated by Sessional Order. Prior to 1888 only Wednesday and morning sittings were regulated.

I am currently having discussions with the hon. Member for Newcastle Upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown), in the light of the report of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House. The report did not however envisage a change to the 10 o'clock rule.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will set up a Select Committee specifically to consider the needs and rights of disabled people.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to do so.

DEFENCE

Parachute Jumps

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 749, about static line fatalities, whether the four fatalities were included in "Static Line Fatalities Under Training", published in October 1992.

Mr. Hanley: Of the four static line parachute jump fatalities at Weston-on-the-Green between 1978 and 1983 included in my answer of 16 March, three were listed in October 1992 in a document entitled "Static Line Fatalities Under Training". The fourth, that of Private Bradshaw on 13 June 1978, was not included owing to an administrative error.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident during military training at Weston-on-the-Green in August 1972 involving Nicholas James.

Mr. Hanley: Senior Under Officer Nicholas James sustained concussion and injuries to his legs and lower spine as a result of a military parachute training accident at Weston-on-the-Green on 15 August 1972. He was treated at the John Radcliffe hospital, Oxford and later returned to the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst. The accident was caused by SUO James becoming entangled with the parachute of another parachutist during the course of his descent.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident during military training at Weston-on-the-Green on or about 13 June 1978 involving John Bradshaw.

Mr. Hanley: Private Bradshaw, a regular soldier on the military basic parachute course, died on 13 June 1978 as a result of the injuries sustained in an accident at Weston-on-the-Green. Private Bradshaw's parachute pack made contact with the door post of the aircraft as he exited, causing him to become entangled in the parachute rigging line and the canopy only partially to open. Private Bradshaw did operate his reserve parachute, but too late to allow its full deployment.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts and for what total sum were let out by his Department and agencies for which it is responsible to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) KPMG Peat Marwick, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) Price Waterhouse, (e) Arthur Andersen, (f) Touche Ross, (g) Grant Thornton, (h) Robson Rhodes and (i) Pannell Kerr Forster for (i) privatisation, (ii) market testing, (iii) management advice, (iv) accounting, (v) audit, (vi) consultancy and (vii) other services in (1) 1980 to 1983, (2) 1984 to 1987, (3) 1988 to 1991 and (4) 1992-93.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Hanley: There is no formal requirement for any of my Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies to lay their annual reports before Parliament. The annual reports in respect of the Dartmoor steering group and working party and the Review Board for Government Contracts have, however, been placed in the Library of the House on previous occasions.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Hanley: The following advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are required in their terms of reference to produce an annual report:

(i) The Dartmoor Steering Group and Working Party;
(ii) The Defence Scientific Advisory Council and Committee;
(iii) The Review Board for Government Contracts;
(iv) The Independent Board of Visitors for the Military Corrective Training Centre.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Hanley: No advisory non-departmental public body has been established by my Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993".

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory basis.

Mr. Hanley: Only two of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department have a statutory basis. They are:

(a) The Dartmoor Steering Group and Working Party was established on a statutory basis under Command No. 6837.
(b) The Independent Board of Visitors was established in accordance with the Naval Detention Quarters Rules 1973 for the RN Detention Quarters, and the imprisonment and Detention Rules Army 1979 for Military Corrective Training Centres.

South Georgia

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision he has made for the spiritual guidance of the troops stationed on South Georgia.

Mr. Hanley: The South Georgia garrison is visited every six weeks by ships based in the Falkland islands. A padre regularly accompanies these sailings and services are held either aboard ship or on the island. Those based in South Georgia have a direct radio link to the Falkland islands and there is a resident service padre at Mount Pleasant as well as a Roman Catholic priest in Port Stanley. The Roman Catholic priest is an officiating padre to the British forces. Either of these can be contacted and consulted as necessary.

Arms Sales

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 118, if he will list (a) the countries to which arms have been sold over the last 12 months and (b) those countries to which arms have not been sold because of human rights abuse.

Mr. Aitken: United Kingdom defence statistics, table 1.11, contains information on United Kingdom exports of defence equipment by region—the 1994 edition will be published in mid-July this year—and the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms covers transfers of certain major arms by country. It has not been the practice of this or preceding Administrations to list all arms sales by country. It would be for my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to address the question of human rights abuses.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the policy adopted by his Department towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Aitken: In accordance with the Government's policy of extending access to official information so as to improve public understanding of the way that Government works, the Ministry of Defence would normally expect to be able to publish consultants' reports in relation to its market testing and other "Competing for Quality" programmes except where there is a clear need to observe commercial confidences, the disclosure of which would damage the competitive position of companies or in-house bid teams.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has provided information on the cost of external consultancy support used in the "Competing for Quality" programme over the period 1 April 1992 to 31 December 1993 to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee as part of its inquiry into the civil service. The Ministry's expenditure on external consultancy support in relation to the "Competing for Quality" programme for the period was £36,000. Expenditure figures for consultancy support contracts let for the current programme period, which ends on 31 September 1994, are not yet available.

TRANSPORT

Road Construction

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those stretches of motorway and trunk roads where porous asphalt has been used in construction; what cost benefit analysis he has carried out in relation to the full costs and savings of using porous asphalt in road construction and repair; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The question which is related to the use of porous asphalt is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 27 June 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State to list those stretches of motorway and trunk roads where porous asphalt has been used in construction; what cost benefit analysis he has carried out in relation to the full costs and savings using porous asphalt in road construction and repair. I have been asked to reply.

Porous asphalt has been laid as trials on A38 at Burton, M1 (South) Leeds and M6 north of Junction 18. These trials have been successful and led to the announcement on 28 July 1992 about the wider use of porous asphalt where conditions are suitable and it is cost effective. Porous asphalt will be used on 14 schemes in the Roads Programme, in due course.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received regarding the need for legislation to regulate wheel clamping.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The most recent representations in favour of legislation to regulate wheel clamping on private land have come from hon. Members in the House and in another place during proceedings of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill. In response the Government have indicated that they are well aware of public concern about the excesses of some wheel clamping operators and that they are actively considering a range of solutions.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has held with the motoring organisations about the need for regulation or control of wheel clamping.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

During the public consultation exercise organised by my Department, the views of all interested parties, including the motoring organisations, were invited. The Automobile Association and the Royal Automobile Club both sent in their views.

Coastguard Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the Coastguard Agency reception on the Royal Yacht Britannia to mark the launching of the agency; and who was invited to attend the event.

Mr. Norris: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Lord MacKay, hosted an official reception on board HMY Britannia, to mark the launch of the Coastguard Agency—Coastguard—and the Marine Safety Agency—MSA. The approximate cost was £1,600 to which may be added any necessary harbour dues.

In addition to eighty members of staff from Coastguard and MSA the guest list included 10 senior representatives of the Department of Transport, six local dignitaries and Members of Parliament, 13 officials of other United Kingdom and European Government Departments and the EC, 14 representatives of major suppliers and contractors to the agencies, and 87 representatives of shipping and maritime industries, services and associations.

Health and Safety, Christopher House

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 835, what assessment he has made of whether all relevant EC directives/United Kingdom safety laws have been complied with during the move of his staff to St. Christopher house, London; and if all visual display unit work stations have had full risk assessments carried out.

Mr. Key: This question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 28 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the move of Highways Agency staff to St. Christopher House.

You asked what assessment had been made of whether all relevant EC Directives/UK Safety Laws have been complied with during the move and if all VDU workstations have had full risk assessments carried out.

We have replaced light fitting in the new offices and replaced chairs at VDU workstations where necessary to comply with EC Directives.

We are continuing to carry out checks to ensure compliance with all the relevant EC Directives and UK Safety Laws following the move. A six-week assessment of the operation of new VDU workstations will be completed shortly.

Following completion of these checks, I am confident that we will fully meet all safety requirements.

I trust this information is helpful.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many environmental impact assessments relating to road schemes are currently in preparation by his Department.

Mr. Key: This question relates to the operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 29 June 1994:

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT ASSESSMENTS ON ROAD SCHEMES

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary question about environmental assessments.

An environmental assessment is carried out for each scheme in the national roads programme and an Environmental Statement is published for those schemes which are likely to have a significant effect on the environment.

The environmental assessment commences at a very early stage in the development of a scheme. The Trunk Road in England 1994 Review identifies the schemes in the national road programme together with their priority.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what criteria his Department's pre-1985 environmental assessment of the M11 link road was based upon; and if he will place a copy of these criteria in the Library;

(2) if he will give details of the schemes considered by his Department for the proposed M11 link road which fully complied with EC directive 85/337/EEC; what was the environmental impact and cost of each; and if he will highlight the differences of each from the scheme approved;

(3) when, before the 1985 decision to authorise construction of the M11 link road, the environmental effects of the scheme were assessed; and if he will place in the Library a summary of the main factors and considerations taken into account;

(4) if he will list all aspects of the current M11 Link Road project that do not comply with European directive 85/337/EEC;

(5) why the EC standards set out in European directive 85/337/EEC were not considered by the subsequent public inquiries into the M11 link road; if it is policy that the rules of such inquiries should allow consideration of such relevant environmental factors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: These questions all relate to the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road, which is an operational matter for the Highways Agency, and I have therefore asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 28 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Questions about the environmental assessment of and the application of Directive 85/337/EEC to, the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road since they are operational matters for the Highways Agency.

Prior to the 1985 decision to proceed with the Link Road environmental assessments were carried out in preparation for the Public Inquiry held in 1983. These were in accordance with current knowledge of methods of assessment at that time and made use of frameworks as laid down by the 1977 report of the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment (SACTRA). A copy of that report is already available in the House of Commons Library. I enclose a copy of the framework relating to the Link Road. The best available summaries of the main factors and considerations then taken into account are contained in the Inspector's Report and the decision letter of the Secretaries of State, copies of both of which I understand were sent to you at the time they were published since you gave evidence at the public inquiry.

Directive 85/337/EEC as implemented by section 105(A) of the Highways Act 1981 requires that where the Secretary of State has under consideration a proposed new highway he shall determine whether or not it requires an environmental assessment, and if so, that an Environmental Statement be published and the public be allowed to comment on it. The Secretary of State is required to consider the Environmental Statement and any opinion expressed on it and to publish his decision as to whether or not initiate the project. The European Commission has accepted that the Link Road project was begun before the Directive came into force in the UK and so the question of whether there are aspects of the Link Road which do not comply with the Directive, or of there being alternative schemes which do or do not comply, does not arise.

No references were made to the Directive at the 1987 and 1989/90 public inquiries into the Link Road because development consent for the project had already been granted. Consideration has always been given to environmental factors at public inquiries where it was relevant to do so.

I have also been asked to write to you in connection with your Parliamentary Question about the employment of Bray's Detective Agency, and since the reply concerns a number of road schemes I will send you a separate letter; however, for the sake of completeness of the record I will just mention here that the Link Road is one of those schemes.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what proportion of the Department of Transport road schemes in the last five years have not been recommended by public inquiry inspectors; and of those recommendations for rejection, how many have been endorsed by the Secretaries of State for Environment and Transport.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 June 1994]: As the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 28 June 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many and what proportion of the Department of Transport road schemes in the last five years, have not been recommended by public inquiry inspectors; and of those recommendations for rejection, how many have been endorsed by the Secretaries of State for Environment and Transport.

In the last five years, five schemes have not been recommended by public inquiry inspectors out of a total of 146 schemes which have been to public inquiry.

Of those five recommendations for rejection, the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Transport endorsed all but one small regional scheme. This has led to the removal of the schemes from the programme, or fresh orders being published.

In about 40 cases the modifications, recommended by the Inspectors, have been endorsed.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has paid in bonuses on road construction contracts; and how much his Department has received in penalty payments on road construction contracts, over the past five years.

Mr. Key [holding answer 23 June 1994]: As the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked for the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 28 June 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how much the Department of Transport has paid in bonuses on road construction contracts and how much the Department has received in penalty payments on road construction contracts, over the past five years.

Incentive contracts involving bonuses and charges are used mainly for major maintenance. During the five year period 1989/90-1993/94, bonuses paid amounted to £18·3M and charges collected were £2M. These figures are based on contracts for which final accounts have been settled and could ultimately be higher. A measure of the ratio of traffic delay costs saved to net bonus payments made is averaging around 5:1.

In addition, a total of £7·88M was paid out to two new construction contracts again for the economic advantages of having the new routes ready sooner, but of course the reason for paying bonuses is to reduce the time for the works and, therefore, the disruption caused to the travelling motorist.

Public Inquiry Cases

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by traffic area office the number of cases taken to public inquiry over the last five years; and in those cases, how many licence holders had (a) the licences revoked, (b) licences suspended, (c) licences curtailed, (d) warnings issued and (e) no further action taken.

Mr. Key: Some of this information is contained in the annual reports of the Traffic Commissioners and licensing authorities, which have been placed in the Library of the House. The remaining information could be collated only at disproportionate expense.

Market Testing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date of the market testing of (a) the records service in his Department and (b) the review currently being undertaken in the records policy and advice unit; and what is the total budget of the market test.

Mr. Norris: The records service market test has cost £60,466 to date. It has a budget of £85,000. The record policy and advice unit is examining how to improve record management standards and cost effectiveness throughout the Department, especially the review process before files are destroyed. The review process study has cost £7,300.

Port Reception Facilities

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ports that have independent contractors providing port reception facilities.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency is currently undertaking a comprehensive survey to assess the quality of reception facilities provided in United Kingdom ports. The survey will indicate the extent to which independent contractors are used to provide facilities. Consideration will be given as to what useful information might be published when the results of the survey have been evaluated.

Unlicensed Light Goods Vehicle Operators

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by traffic area office all cases of LGV operators being convicted as a result of being unlicensed for the last five years.

Mr. Key: A list of all cases of LGV operators convicted as a result of being unlicensed for the last five years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, the total number of cases prosecuted by the vehicle inspectorate for not possessing a goods vehicle operator's licence from April 1989 to March 1994 is 4,648. This figure is broken down as follows:

	Number
Scotland	278
North West	590
North East	919
South Wales	458
West Midlands	650
West	239
East	418
South East	1,096

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by traffic area office the current estimated number of unlicensed LGV operators and the methods used to calculate this figure.

Mr. Key: We have no reliable estimates of the number of unlicensed LGV operators.

Road Toll Charges

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the effect on the regions of the United Kingdom of road toll charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) on 24 January at column 78.

Oil Discharges

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Government will take to ensure that cross-checks between oil record books and automatic printout of discharges will become a routine part of port state control inspections.

Mr. Norris: Port state control inspections already include the routine inspection of the oil record book. Further consideration is being given to the minimum extent of routine inspections by our partners in the Paris memorandum of understanding on port state control and the Government are seeking their urgent consideration of all of Lord Donaldson's recommendations on port state control.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the inconvenience caused to the travelling public of the non-interchangeability of tickets in the privatised rail companies.

Mr. Freeman: Ticketing arrangements are at present an operational matter for the British Railways board. For the future, the Secretary of State has instructed the franchising director to require franchisees to offer tickets which are inter-available between their services where he believes that the benefits of doing so will outweigh the likely benefits of price competition and service diversity. The franchising director is considering the implementation of this policy in consultation with British Rail and the rail regulator.

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards the publication of external consultants' reports in relation to market testing.

Mr. Norris: Decisions on whether to publish reports by external consultants in market tests are taken on a case by case basis in the light of all the relevant circumstances, including commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the total cost of external consultancy fees incurred by his Department in relation to market testing.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is given in the table. It includes all the items in the Department's competing for quality programmes, including contracting out and privatisation.

Pelican and Zebra Crossings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety benefits of marking the road at the sides at pelican crossings; and what plans he has to introduce such markings.

Mr. Key: [holding answer 28 June 1994]: Pelican crossings are required to have the familiar ziz-zag markings. We are not at present considering the introduction of any further marking.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the relative safety benefits of pelican crossings and zebra crossings.

Mr. Key [holding answer 28 June 1994]: Research conducted by the Transport Research Laboratory has shown that although accident rates vary from site to site, the average rates for pelican and zebra crossings are similar overall.

London Underground

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish a table showing for each London underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 24 June the number of (i) crimes of violence, (ii) robbery and (iii) other offences; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each London underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 24 June the number and percentage of escalators out of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The information is not available in exactly the form requested. The table shows the number and percentage of escalators out of service between 1 January 1994 to 31 March 1994. From 1 April 1994 London Underground's target for escalator performance has been changed to measure hours out of service across the whole service day, and this is reflected in the figures quoted from 1 April. Data are not available for June 1994.

including cancellations, which resulted in a headway of more than 20 minutes; and how many of these were attributable.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: This information is not available in exactly the form requested. The table shows the number of major delays to service for each accounting period between January and May 1994. For the last three periods of the 1993-94 financial year, a major delay to service is defined as a delay of 20 minutes or more; since the beginning of 1994-95, only delays over 15 minutes have been measured by London Underground —in line with the current threshold for refunds under the LUL customer charter. No data are yet available for June 1994.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing for each London underground line, and for each four-week period between 1 January and 24 June the number and length of station closures (a) exceeding 20 minutes during the usual period for passenger travel, (b) exceeding one hour during the usual period for passenger travel, (c) exceeding one day, (d) exceeding one week and (e) exceeding one month which were attributable to (i) train breakdowns, (ii) signal failures, (iii) track or points failures, (iv) derailments or collisions, (v) leaves on the line, (vi) staff shortages, (vii) adverse weather conditions, excluding leaves on the line and (viii) bomb alerts.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: This information is not available in the form requested. The tables show station closures over 20 minutes but not more than one hour, and over one hour, caused by staff shortages (vi) and security alerts (viii)—this does not include station closures caused by individual suspect packages. Information on (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), and (vii) is not collected by London Underground—it is extremely rare for a station to be closed for any of these reasons. Data are not collected in the form requested for closures in excess of one hour, and figures are not yet available for June 1994.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing for each London underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 24 June the number and length of (a) attributable station closures, (b) non-attributable station closures, (c) exceeding 20 minutes during the usual period for passenger travel, (d) exceeding one hour during the usual period for passenger travel, (e) exceeding one day, (f) exceeding one week and (g) exceeding one month; which stations, closed during the period, have yet to be reopened; when each closed station will re-open; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The information is not available in the form requested. The tables show attributable and non-attributable station closures over 20 minutes but not more than one hour, and over one hour. No stations were closed for more than one day with the exception of Mornington Crescent on the Northern line, which has been closed by London underground for refurbishment and is not included in the tables. No data are yet available for June 1994.

Coastguards

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the numbers and responsibilities of the auxiliary coastguards assigned to each Coastguard Agency office.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: A total of 3,515 auxiliary coastguards are assigned to the Coastguard Agency. The table gives a breakdown by rescue centre of numbers of auxiliaries and their responsibilities.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the frequency with which auxiliary coastguards have been called out in the year to July 1994; how many were called out; and what was the nature and location of the incident in each case.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The number of incidents to which auxiliary coastguards were called out during the period 1 July 1993 to 26 June 1994 totals 6,807. To provide details of the number of auxiliaries involved; nature and location of each incident would be of disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the annual budget of the Coastguards Agency is spent on the remuneration of auxiliary coastguards.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: Out of the Coastguard Agency's budget for the financial year 1994-95 of some £49·9 million, 3 per cent. has been set aside for the cost of allowances paid to auxiliary coastguards.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of auxiliary coastguards pay and allowances (a) excluding and (b) including training costs in each coastguard region in 1993-94; and what it is projected to be in 1994-95.

Development Aid

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much in cash terms and constant prices the Government spent in 1980, 1990, 1991 and 1992 on development aid to developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Expenditure details requested are as follows:

United Kingdom Gross Official Development Assistance to Developing Countries[1]

Official Development Assistance	Cash Terms £ million	Constant Prices (1992) £ million
1980	866	1,790

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether British aid projects have been affected adversely by ethnic clashes in Kenya; and what representations he has made on these matters to the Kenyan Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No British aid projects have been directly affected by the clashes. We have registered our concerns over the violence. We are supporting victims of the clashes by funding the programme launched jointly by the Government of Kenya, the United Nations development programme, donors and non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the good governance issues that he takes into account in considering aid projects for Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our programme aid, in Kenya as elsewhere, depends not only on economic reform but on a conducive political environment, with effective action to improve open and accountable government, including dealing with corruption, reducing tribal tensions and enhancing press freedom. We are, through our project aid —for example, support for the legal sector—seeking to enhance the processes of transparency and accountability.

International Environment Protection

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much in cash terms and constant prices the Government spent in 1980, 1990, 1991 and 1992 on international environmental protection.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: Figures are not available for 1980 and 1990. Preliminary data derived from a pilot statistical analysis of bilateral projects show that expenditure on projects that had environmental protection as an objective was £108 million in 1991-92 and £124 million in 1992-93, in cash terms. In constant 1992-93 prices, this represents £112 million and £124 million respectively.

The analysis covers approximately 57 per cent. of all bilateral expenditure. It does not include multilateral aid.

Central and Eastern Europe

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much in cash terms and constant prices, the Government spent in 1980, 1990, 1991 and 1992 on aid to central and eastern Europe.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his Department's involvement with TECs.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has sought information and guidance from Central London's training and enterprise council in connection with initiatives such as investors in people and NVQ national standards.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Victim Compensation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that compensation awarded by the courts to victims of criminal acts is always paid.

Mr. Maclean: Courts already have substantial powers of enforcement for use when an offender fails to pay promptly a compensation order or other monetary penalty. These include means inquiry and attachment of earnings or social security benefits, seizure and sale of property and imprisonment. Decisions about which enforcement sanctions to use in a particular case are for the courts. Magistrates courts are responsible for the collection and enforcement of compensation orders in individual cases. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has recently circulated fresh guidance on how enforcement procedures might be improved.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many discretionary life sentence prisoners do not qualify as such for the purposes of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the case of prisoners sentenced before 1 October 1992, section 34 of the 1991 Act applies where the Secretary of State so certifies under the transitional provisions of the Act. One prisoner was not so certified.

The application of section 34 to prisoners sentenced on or after 1 October 1992 is a matter for the courts. Information on the number of cases where section 34 has not been applied is not available.

The status of prisoners serving a discretionary life sentence who have been transferred to hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 is currently subject to appeal. Information on the number who may or may not qualify for section 34 provisions could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people sentenced to detention at Her Majesty's pleasure under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 are currently detained; how many of these are now adults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The latest available information is for 30 April 1994. On that date there were 250 persons, of whom 61 were aged under 21 and 189 were adults, held in England and Wales who had been sentenced to detention at Her Majesty's pleasure under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mandatory life sentence prisoners have been told their tariff dates following the decision of the House of Lords in the case of R. v. Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte Doody and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 27 June 1994, 966 mandatory life sentence prisoners had been informed of their tariff in accordance with the arrangements set out in my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence), on 4 November 1993, Official Report, columns 376-78.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases the Home Secretary has increased the tariff period recommended by the judiciary in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of cases in which the tariff has been set higher than the period recommended by either the trial judge or the Lord Chief Justice is as follows:

Year	Number
[1]1990	57
1991	32
1992	19
1993	4

[1]Figures available only for August-December.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in respect of the age limit of 70 years for members of the new proposed police authorities; and if he will list them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have received four letters from hon. Members specifically on this subject since the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill entered the House of Commons. Information relating to letters from hon. Members received before this date, and to correspondence from the general public, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in respect of the timetable for people who wish to apply for membership of the new proposed police authorities; and if he will list them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Electoral Law and Procedure

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now announce the results of his Department's review of electoral law and procedure.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer the hon. Member to a question from the hon. Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) on 4 March, Official Report, column 933. My officials have now met representatives of the local authority associations and will report to me in due course on the outcome of the review.

May Report

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of Sir John May's inquiry into the convictions of the Guildford Four will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: As I announced on 16 May, my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and I have received Sir John May's report of his inquiry into the case of the Guildford Four who were convicted in 1975 of murder and conspiracy to cause explosions following the Guildford public house bombings in October 1974. Paul Hill and Patrick Armstrong were additionally convicted of murder and conspiracy to cause explosions in connection with the Woolwich public house bombing in November 1974. Their convictions were quashed by the Court of Appeal on 19 October 1989 following the decision of the then Home Secretary, my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) to refer their case to the Court of Appeal under the provisions of section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968.

This report is being published today in response to an Order of the House for a Return. We wish to thank Sir John, and all those who assisted him throughout his inquiry, for the care and thoroughness with which he and they have examined the circumstances surrounding the convictions of the four and the subsequent consideration given to representations made on their behalf to my Department that a miscarriage of justice may have occurred.

In his report, Sir John examines how the Guildford and Woolwich public house bombings were investigated by Surrey constabulary and the Metropolitan police respectively, the circumstances which led to the Four's arrest, and to the arrest of others in connection with the offences, and reviews the basis of the decision to prosecute the four. He then details the admissions made by the four in various statements to the police and sets out their respective explanations for why these were made. The alibis of the four for the Guildford bombing are examined in detail, as are the alibis of Paul Hill and Patrick Armstrong for the Woolwich bombing. Sir John has also considered the conduct of the trial, the interviews given by three of the four to the police following their convictions, the disclosure of forensic correlation evidence at the trial, the arrest of the Balcombe street gang in December 1975 and the admissions made by some of them and by one of their associates with regard to the Guildford and Woolwich bombings. Sir John has also examined the events which preceded the four's appeal against conviction in 1977, the conduct of that appeal, the role of Home Office Ministers and officials in considering representations alleging that a miscarriage of justice had occurred in their case and finally the 1989 appeal which resulted in their convictions being quashed.

This was a very serious miscarriage of justice. The Government are determined that lessons are learned from such cases and applied effectively in the future. This is why we set up Sir John's inquiry and, more recently, the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Sir John's report contains a number of serious criticisms about the handling by the police of the original investigation, for example the number of arrests made, the inadequate basis for many of those arrests and the treatment accorded to those held in custody. However, it also acknowledges the many changes which have already taken place with regard to police powers and practice following the enactment of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the resulting improvements achieved through the regulation of such matters as the interrogation of suspects, the time for which they can be detained in custody before being brought before the courts and their treatment while in custody under the codes of practice issued under the 1984 Act.

The report refers to the Prevention of Terrorism Act, in connection with the number of people arrested during the early stages of the police investigations of the Guildford and Woolwich bombings and concludes that, in relation to many of them, the police exceeded the powers available to them under the Act. Sir John draws attention to the safeguards provided by PACE and expresses concern that there are greater risks of injustice in terrorist cases where some of the PACE safeguards do not apply.

I have noted those points very carefully but think it important to stress that whatever early difficulties were encountered in using the Act's provisions, those do not reflect upon the way in which the Act is used now. The police are now very much better informed about the way in which their powers should be exercised. Detailed guidance has been issued and is supplemented by regular briefings. All persons detained under the PTA in England and Wales are covered either by the statutory safeguards in PACE or by the specific safeguards which have been built into PTA itself. In particular, PACE code of practice C, covering the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers applies to all persons in police detention including those arrested under the PTA.

The allegations of misconduct and ill treatment by police officers reported by Sir John have been the subject of appropriate action, including disciplinary action, wherever sufficient evidence has been available. Since the 1970s, considerable improvements have been made to the way in which complaints against the police are conducted. If similar allegations were to be made now, the police investigation would be likely to be undertaken by another police force under the supervision of a member of the Police Complaints Authority. The Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill, currently before Parliament, will provide scope for police disciplinary action to be quicker and less legalistic.

Sir John's report notes the prosecution's failure to disclose before the trial expert witness statements and an alibi statement that might have been helpful to the defence; but he attributes those failures to regrettable human error rather than to any deliberate attempt to pervert the course of justice or to any failure of the criminal justice system itself. He also recognises that in certain other respects the prosecution team made fuller disclosure than its legal obligations required. It is worth noting that since the Guildford four's convictions, the law and practice on disclosure has developed in such a way that it should be much less likely that such a situation could occur.

In reviewing the Home Office's role in this case, Sir John concludes that the criteria which successive Home Secretaries have used to determine whether a case should be referred to the Court of Appeal are sound in law and logic and provide no grounds for criticism. I welcome his further conclusion that, within the limits imposed by those criteria, the Home Office investigated the representations it received with care and efficiency. We seek constantly to apply the lessons to be learned from cases of this kind and we shall go on doing so. In the years since the Guildford case was referred my Department has developed a broader approach to cases that come to it for review, in particular by being ready where appropriate to investigate cases more widely than the specific points raised in representations, and by being ready to start up inquiries where a case comes to attention without necessarily waiting for representations to be made.

The Government have accepted the Royal Commission's recommendation that a new independent body should be established to take over my responsibilities for reviewing such cases in the future, and I am currently considering the responses we have received to the discussion paper which we issued last March.

Clearly, much has already been done to correct past mistakes and failings, but the Government are anxious that the criminal justice system in England and Wales should be as effective and efficient as possible in investigating crimes and prosecuting and convicting the guilty—and only the guilty.

The Royal Commission made 352 recommendations for changes to be made to improve the criminal justice system in this country. Almost half of those have now been accepted by the Government, and some are included in the current Criminal Justice Bill before the House of Lords.

The Government attach very great importance to the proper administration of justice and will take whatever action may be necessary in the future to safeguard against miscarriages of justice.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General what is his Department's involvement with TECs.

The Attorney-General: The Law Officers' departments have not been involved formally with TECs.

Prosecuting Authorities

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the prosecuting authorities.

The Attorney-General: The review team, headed by Mr. John Graham, which examined the handling of serious fraud has now delivered its report. Copies of the report and of annexes 1 to 5 and 7 have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Annex 6 of the report has not been published. It is a summary of some recent and current cases in both Departments which should, in line with the general handling of such material, be retained within the prosecuting departments.

The review team undertook a comprehensive study of the arrangements for the investigation and prosecution of criminal fraud cases in the Serious Fraud Office and the Crown Prosecution Service, examining in particular relative work loads and the criteria for allocating cases between the two Departments and the organisation and management of investigation and prosecution work in the two Departments. It took account of the role of the police in fraud investigations and of the DTI in company matters generally. The review did not constitute the feasibility study into the possibility of a merger between the Serious Fraud Office and the fraud investigation group of the Crown Prosecution Service suggested by the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, but the review team was asked in its terms of reference to carry out its work in the light of the Royal Commission's recommendation 36.

I am grateful to Mr. John Graham and his team for the work which they have done. The report identifies management and organisational issues which need to be addressed by the Crown Prosecution Service and Serious Fraud Office and on which the review team has made helpful recommendations. In many cases, the issues had already been identified within the prosecuting Departments and improvements set in hand. The vast majority of the remaining recommendations are accepted and I have asked the Director of Public Prosecutions and the director of the Serious Fraud Office to take these forward urgently, consulting the police where appropriate. A joint vetting committee is being established to ensure all complex and serious fraud cases are handled by the prosecuting department which has the most suitable powers and resources for the particular case. The copies of the report placed in the Libraries are accompanied by a response jointly prepared by the Serious Fraud Office and the Crown Prosecution Service, which deals briefly with each recommendation in so far as it affects each Department.

The report concludes that there is a range of cases which can be satisfactorily handled only through the multi-disciplinary approach to investigation and prosecution recommended by the fraud trials committee chaired by Lord Roskill. There are, however, some cases which can be described as serious or complex but which do not require that approach. The review team noted that there was some overlap between cases allocated to the fraud investigation group of the Crown Prosecution Service and to the Serious Fraud Office. It identified some potential benefits which could flow from the establishment of a single organisation which would deal with all serious or complex fraud cases but handle them on a differential basis. The review team saw scope for arrangements under which some cases would be both investigated and prosecuted by the new organisation while other cases would only be prosecuted by it. The review team made no recommendation as to whether any new organisation should constitute part of an enlarged Serious Fraud Office or Crown Prosecution Service but identified advantages and disadvantages associated with each option.

Further consideration will be given to the question of merger in conjunction with the studies I announced on 6 December 1993, Official Report, column 60, to establish whether executive agency status was appropriate for the Serious Fraud Office and the Crown Prosecution Service. Ministers will wish to take a final decision about a possible merger in the light of recommendations arising from those studies.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on BSE.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's Chief Medical Officer continues to advise that there is no evidence that humans can contract Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease from an animal with BSE. There has been no significant increase in the incidence of CJD in the United Kingdom over the years 1985 to 1993. Also, the Chief Veterinary Officer advises me that the incidence of BSE among cattle in the United Kingdom continues to fall as a result of the control measures that have been put in place. There has been a particularly sharp decline in the incidence of the disease in cattle less than five years old.

A large number of monitoring and research studies have been undertaken into BSE since 1988, and these continue. They include a BSE pathogenesis experiment which has involved the feeding of calves with a high dose of BSE-infected brain tissue. Some preliminary positive results from the BSE pathogenesis experiment will be published shortly in the "Veterinary Record". The experiment, begun in December 1991 and still continuing, is designed to investigate the biological pathways through which the disease develops in cattle.

These results show that it is possible to transmit BSE to laboratory mice from intestines taken from young cattle when fed a substantial dose of brain material known to contain BSE. It is not surprising that BSE has been found in those tissues, which scientists have always considered a likely route for feedborne infection. The relatively short period in which the infectivity has shown up, in one case six months after being fed the BSE dose, does however raise the issue of whether calves up to six months should continue to be exempt from the ban on the use of specified bovine offals—SBOs—of which the intestine is one.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I have sought the advice of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee—SEAC—and have considered this with the Chief Medical Officer. The Committee noted the reduced risk of feedborne infection following the ban on feeding ruminant protein to ruminants such as cattle, which was introduced in 1988, and the continuing lack of evidence of significant maternal or horizontal transmission. They concluded that the theoretical risk of infection of man from food from infected calves is minuscule. They advised that the continuing results of the experiment should be carefully monitored to confirm this basic conclusion.

I have carefully considered this advice in consultation with my right hon. Friends the other Agriculture Ministers and the Secretary of State for Health. We have concluded while the assessment of SEAC and of the CMO is that any risk to health is minuscule, the Government's policy of extreme caution in relation to BSE requires us to ensure that the tissues in which infectivity might potentially occur are removed from the human and animal food chain. We accordingly propose to extend the scope of the existing ban on the use of specified bovine offals to the intestines and thymus of calves under the age of six months. An exception will be made for calves which die before two months of age which cannot be used for human consumption under other existing legislation. The necessary orders will be duly made with the minimum of delay. This action is purely precautionary and will be kept under review.

I intend to give particular thought to the possible scope for alternative safeguards less restrictive than those now in place in the case of cattle from herds which have not been exposed to BSE. Such an approach is now becoming appropriate as the epidemic continues to decline.

I should repeat that the Chief Medical Officer continues to advise that there is no evidence whatever that BSE causes Creutzfeldt-Jacob disease and, similarly, not the slightest evidence that eating beef or hamburgers causes CJD.

I am making available, in the House Library, a background document giving more detailed information about the experimental results and the advice of SEAC, the CMO and the CVO.

I am informing the EU Commission and the EU Scientific Veterinary Committee of the action being taken.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many individual payments have been made to farmers as compensation for the slaughter of cows infected with BSE; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: It is not possible without disproportionate costs to break down the total amount paid out in BSE compensation into a list of individual payments made to specific farmers. However, the total number of cattle compulsorily slaughtered as BSE suspects since August 1988 and up to 28 June 1994 on which compensation would have automatically been paid is 122,171 in England, 6,455 in Scotland and 13,603 in Wales. There are also occasions where, because compulsory slaughter has not taken place, compensation is not automatically paid. In those circumstances, each individual case is assessed on its merits and ex-gratia payments may be awarded.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of compensation is given to farmers for each cow slaughtered because of BSE; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Compensation paid to farmers for an animal compulsorily slaughtered as a BSE suspect is an amount equal to 100 per cent. of either the market value of the animal or the monthly indicative market price—IMP—whichever is the lower figure. Where subsequent laboratory examination does not confirm that the animal was affected by BSE, compensation is an amount equal to 100 per cent. of the market value of the animal or 125 per cent. of the monthly IMP, whichever is the lower figure. The monthly IMP is a weighted average of prices of Friesian and Holstein cows, heifers in milk and in calf, and barren dairy cattle taking into account the age distribution of cattle slaughtered as BSE suspects in the month. The IMP for July will be £890.

Cormorants

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations her Department has received from angling organisations and angling clubs in England and Wales, and from individual anglers, about cormorant predation; what action is being taken in response; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The following individuals, organisations and clubs have expressed their concern to the Ministry about cormorant predation.

Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, the Ministry is a licensing authority for the killing of cormorants where evidence of serious damage to a fishery has been provided. The Ministry considers each application on its merits and is advised by Agricultural Development Advisory Service, the Ministry's wildlife advisers. In addition, the Ministry consults English Nature. Together with other Government Departments, conservation bodies and fisheries interests such as the Salmon and Trout Association, the Atlantic Salmon Trust, the Country Landowners Association and the British Field Sports Society, the Ministry is reviewing its research and development programme on piscivorous birds to inform policy better.

Dogs

Sir David Madel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes she is planning to the regulations that apply to the bringing into the United Kingdom of dogs from other European Union countries; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 24 June 1994]: The Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) (Amendment) Order 1994 has been made today. This order implements the derogation negotiated by the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland for the importation of commercially traded dogs and cats under the live animals trade directive (92/65/EEC), commonly called the "balai".

Under the amendment order, from 1 July 1994, commercially traded dogs and cats will be able to be imported into the United Kingdom from other member states without quarantine if they comply with all the following strict criteria. They must:

be the subject of a commercial trade;
come from a registered holding;
on the day of dispatch show no signs of contagious disease;
have an implanted microchip identifying the animal with a unique number which will also be shown on the accompanying certification (the importer will be required to supply a suitable reader with each import);
have been born and kept on the holding of origin since birth with no contact with wild animals;
in the case of dogs, have been vaccinated against distemper;
be transported by an authorised carrier;
have vaccination and health certificates signed by an Official Veterinary Surgeon; have been vaccinated against rabies when at least 3 months old and at least 6 months prior to export (with boosters if appropriate); have been blood tested not less than 30 days after vaccination to show that the vaccination has been effective; and have the movement notified in advance to the local Divisional Veterinary Officer.

The order also includes powers to check the identity of the imported animals and their vaccination status. These stringent new procedures replicate our quarantine arrangements in many respects and provide sufficient safeguards to protect our rabies-free status.

PRIME MINISTER

EC President

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make it his policy not to agree to any change in the procedure for choosing a President of the European Commission which would directly or indirectly remove or restrict the requirement for consensus;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to agree to the appointment as a member of the European Commission any person who has not made it clear that he is opposed to any further transfer of power from Whitehall and Westminster to Brussels and Strasbourg;

(3) if he will make it his policy not to agree to the appointment as President of the European Commission of a person with known federalist views;

(4) if he will make it his policy not to agree to the appointment as a member of the European Commission of any person who has advocated the transfer of responsibility for monetary and exchange rate policy to the EC and its institutions.

The Prime Minister: I shall continue to insist that the President and other members of the Commission are appointed by common accord of the Governments of the member states, as the treaty requires. I shall consider candidates for the Presidency of the Commission on their merits.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 30 June.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 30 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what response Her Majesty's Government have given to lawyers of the two Libyan suspects of the bombing of Pan Am 103 who have made representations to Her Majesty's Government regarding the statement of Youssef Chaabane in a Beirut court that he planted the bomb.

The Prime Minister: We have received no such representations.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Berry: To ask the Prime Minister when the Government decided to oppose the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill at Report stage.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 June 1994]: The Government made clear their doubts about the Bill as a whole at Second Reading and on other occasions, but we had also indicated that we would see what, if any, parts were appropriate to take further. In the event, debates during Committee confirmed our doubts, and the Government explained the reasons why they were unable to support the Bill at Report stage on 6 May.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory base.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Political Honours Scrutiny Committee, sponsored by the Cabinet Office, was set up by an Order in Council which resulted from the Abuses of Honours Act 1925.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993."

Mr. Waldegrave: "Public Bodies 1993", published in December 1993, lists non-departmental public bodies in existence at 1 April 1993. The following advisory non-departmental public bodies have been established by my Department since then:

Citizen's Charter Complaints Task Force
Technology Foresight Steering Group

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Executive Agencies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to review the need to bring executive agencies of Government fully within the scope of competition regulation and fair trading control.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As the citizens charter second report 1994 explains, Crown immunity is being progressively reduced as legislative opportunities arise. In the meantime, Crown bodies are expected to behave as if they were bound by regulations. This applies to executive agencies, which are required to behave in accordance with the principles underlying competition law.

Receivers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to proposals under which accountants acting as receivers, administrators and liquidators would be required to publish information about their affairs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am not aware of any proposals under which accountants acting as receivers, administrators and liquidators would be required to publish information about their affairs.

Insolvency Regulator

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to proposals for appointing an independent regulator for insolvency.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have considered proposals for the appointment of an independent monitor in individual insolvencies. I am anxious to encourage creditors to make use of the powers available to them to supervise insolvencies and I do not believe that the additional cost of such an independent monitor is justified.

However, the Government welcome the setting up of the joint institute monitoring unit by professional bodies whose members are engaged in insolvency practice. This will provide users of insolvency procedures with a basic level of assurance as to professional standards and regulatory compliance.

Intra-EEC Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish figures corresponding to those in the December 1993 issue of "Business Monitor MM20" for total trade in tables 3 and 4 for intra-EEC trade together with those for 1992.

Mr. Needham: Information for 1993, including intra-EC trade, was published by the Central Statistical Office in tables 2 and 3 in the December 1993 issue of "Business Monitor MM20A", "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom with the World (including data for countries within the European Community: Intrastat)". Information for 1992 was published in "Business Monitor MA20", "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom". Both publications are available in the Library of the House.

External Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table corresponding to table F2 of the 1991 "Supplement to the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" showing separately the weighted average, excluding the United Kingdom, against the EC Six and the other listed countries.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is given in the table.

Postal Services

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make a statement about his plans for the postal service.

Mr. Heseltine: I am today publishing a Green Paper on the future of postal services. It sets out the challenges and opportunities facing the Post Office businesses and the Government's response to them.

We have one of the best postal services in the world. The Post Office and its employees have responded well to the challenges of recent years, but enormous changes are taking place in the markets in which the Post Office operates. If the Post Office businesses are to seize the opportunities and respond to increasing competition, while providing further improvements in the service to customers, then more fundamental changes are required. In its recent report on the future of the Post Office, the Select Committee on Trade and Industry said:

"What is undoubtedly true is that the Post Office cannot be retained in its present form".

The Government agree. The status quo is not an option.

As I made clear in my statement to the House on 19 May, the Government's consideration of those issues is subject to three vital and non-negotiable commitments. These are the maintenance of a nationwide letter and parcel service with daily delivery to every address in the United Kingdom, a uniform and affordable structure of prices, and a nationwide network of post offices.

The Government propose to retain the current structure of the nationwide network of post offices, keeping Post Office Counters in the public sector. It believes that the present partnership between Post Office Counters, at the hub of the network, and the private sector business people who run sub-post offices—which represent over 19,000 of the nearly 20,000 post offices—works well and should continue. The Government intend to maintain and strengthen the business and the network by allowing them to take on new areas of work, building on their existing activities. It also proposes that there should be significant investment in the automation of many of their clerical routines, in particular benefit payments.

As for Royal Mail, the Government accept that, to survive and prosper, the business needs greater commercial freedom to seize new opportunities and to meet greater competitive challenges in the communications market. The Green Paper sets out the options for achieving this that the Government are considering.

The Government's preferred option is a new partnership arrangement under which the Royal Mail, together with Parcelforce, would be jointly owned by the Government, the public, sub-postmasters and employees, with the Government retaining a stake of 49 per cent. of the shares. Any further sale of shares by the Government would be subject to parliamentary approval. Under this option, the Government would guarantee the three non-negotiable commitments through legislation.

The Green Paper discusses the issues of regulation and competition in the postal sector, and describes how greater competition and choice would be progressively introduced for customers. It also discusses consumer representation, the position of the Post Office's employees and sub-postmasters and VAT, as well as the royal associations which the Post Office has traditionally enjoyed.

The Government are inviting comments on the Green Paper by 30 September.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether consideration has been given to the impact of paragraph 6.4.2 of chapter 3 of the European Green Paper on post as it relates to the privatisation of (a) the Royal Mail and (b) Parcelforce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The EC Green Paper has no legislative force and therefore has no impact on the legal position. The section referred to by the hon. Member does indicate that the Commission intends to review the competitive interface between public postal services and those of other operators in respect of VAT. The Government have also addressed this issue in their own Green Paper, published today. The Commission has not, however, brought forward any proposals in this sector. Public postal services, such as the universal services which will under any outcome continue to be provided by Royal Mail and Parcelforce, therefore remain free of VAT.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are in current full-time employment with Parcelforce in Stoke-on-Trent; how many of them are currently in temporary contracts; how many of them are currently employed as casual workers; what are the recruitment procedures used in respect of (a) permanent, (b) part-time and (c) casual work; and if he will give details of different rates of pay and conditions of employment in respect of (i) permanent, (ii) part-time and (iii) casual work.

Mr. McLoughlin: Parcelforce's staffing and recruitment practices are commercial matters for the business.

EC Sixth VAT Directive

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the European Commission about amending article 13(a)(1)(a) of the EC sixth VAT directive, whereby public postal services are exempt from VAT.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Commission has indicated in its Green Paper on postal services its intention to review the VAT treatment of postal services, and this has arisen in discussions with them. The Commission has not, however, brought forward any proposed amendment.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the European Commission about the interpretation of article 13(a)(1)(a) of the EC sixth VAT directive as it relates to the privatisation of Parcelforce.

Mr. McLoughlin: My officials, together with those of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, have had a number of contacts with the Commission of the European Communities about that provision of the sixth directive. The Government are satisfied that, under the directive as it stands, privatisation would not mean the imposition of VAT on the universal letter and parcel services provided by Royal Mail and Parcelforce. The Government have made it clear that under any option they finally adopt, stamps will continue to be free of VAT.

Invisible Exports

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the share of invisible exports which go to other EC countries; and if he will make a statement about the significance of invisible exports to the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Needham: EC member states accounted for 35 per cent. of the United Kingdom's invisible credits in 1992, the latest year for which an analysis by country is available. Total invisible credits accounted for nearly half of United Kingdom's overseas earnings in 1993, and represented 18 per cent. of "money GDP".

Asil Nadir

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration was given to evidence from the trustees before the Official Receiver's decision not to apply to the courts for a suspension before the automatic discharge in November of the bankruptcy of Mr. Asil Nadir; and on what grounds this decision was reached.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Official Receiver's application under section 279(3) of the Insolvency Act 1986 in the case of Mr. Asil Nadir—Suspension of automatic discharge—was lodged in court on 5 May 1994 and is due to be heard on 1 July 1994.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 225, if he will publish a table indicating the downtrend of manufacturing employment in the developed world between 1979 and 1994.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The information requested is published in the OECD's "Labour Force Statistics (1971-1991)", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Business Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the rate of new business formation and failure in (a) Fife and (b) Scotland on a quarterly basis over the last three years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 27 June 1994]: Not all the figures requested are available. The best guide to trends in the number of business starts and closures comes from the annual VAT data; quarterly data are not available. Figures for the years 1990 to 1992 are published in "VAT Registrations and Deregistrations, County and District Analysis", 1980 to 1991, and 1992 editions. Both these documents are available in the Library of the House or online via NOMIS.

Quarterly figures for company insolvencies in Scotland were last published on 6 May in the Association of British Chambers of Commerce's "Business Briefing", which is available in the Library of the House. Equivalent figures for Fife are not available.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Initiative

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his estimate is of (a) current job vacancies and (b) job vacancies to be covered by the new training initiative.

Miss Widdecombe: In May 1994, the seasonally adjusted number of unfilled vacancies at United Kingdom jobcentres stood at 147,000. It is estimated that, nationally, jobcentre vacancies represent about one third of all unfilled vacancies.

Modern apprenticeships are training places; high-quality training, typically taking about three years to complete. In five years' time there could be over 150,000 apprentices in training if employers respond, as I am sure that they will.

Disabled People (Employment)

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sum his Department is currently spending on promoting the employment of disabled persons; and what the figures were in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: People with disabilities have access to all the Department's employment and training programmes, and benefit from all the Department's initiatives on promoting employment opportunities. Expenditure on disabled people within mainstream programmes cannot be disaggregated from overall programme expenditure. The following table contains such information as is available on programme expenditure on specialist programmes and initiatives for disabled people only and relates to expenditure from 1986-87 onward. It is not possible to provide figures for the years before 1986-87 without incurring disproportionate cost.

Employment Department Expenditure on Promoting People with Disabilities

	£000
1986-87	90,451
1987-88	94,181
1988-89	98,465

1992-93	[2]160,011
1993-94	163,651
1994-95	[3]174,461

Notes: All yearly totals are cash figures. The figures are based on Employment Department and Employment Service (ES) published appropriation accounts, except the 1993-94 and 1994-95 figures, which are based on the ES supply estimates. They do not include any administration costs or Supported (formerly sheltered) Employment research and development costs.

[1] From and including 1989-90, totals include expenditure on services for people with disabilities which, in previous years, were not separately identifiable.

[2] Totals for 1992-93 and 1993-94 include expenditure on advertising and publicity which, in previous years, were not separately identifiable.

[3] Includes resources transferred from the revenue support grant of the Department of the Environment, Scottish and Welsh Offices for local authority expenditure on Supported Employment.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the membership of the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities following its reconstitution.

Mr. David Hunt: I am appointing seven new members and reappointing 10 existing members to the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities for a period of three years from 1 July 1994. The chairman of the Council, Mr. Alan Smith MBE, FIPM, FBIM, FinstD, has also been reappointed.

The members of the council are:

Members appointed after consultation with organisations representing employers

Ms J. T. Mellor
Mr. P. H. Newman

Job Finders' Grant

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the job finders' grant to areas other than the pilot areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The job finders' grant pilots are being evaluated. No decision has been taken to extend them to other areas.

Trade Union Membership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what account was taken in preparation of the Government's White Paper on competitiveness (Cm 2563) of the paper by Professor Beenstock et al on the United Kingdom economic recovery in the 1930s published in Bank of England Panel Paper No. 23; and if he will publish a table giving figures comparable to their Chart 42 for trade union membership as a percentage of employees in employment of the period since 1964.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Today's circumstances are very different from those of the 1930s. The trend in trade union membership from 1964 to 1992 is presented in the following table:

Trade union membership as a percentage of employees in employment in the United Kingdom 1964-1992

Note:

Union membership totals are the end of year figures.

[1]Discontinuity:—Thirty-one organisations previously regarded as trade unions are excluded from 1975 onwards because they failed to satisfy the statutory definition of a trade union in the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act, 1974. To help provide a link in the series, two sets of figures are given for 1975. The first gives the figures on the original basis for comparison with earlier years, while the second gives estimates for comparison with later years.

[2]The employees in employment estimates are at June of each year between 1964 and 1977, and at December of each year between 1978 and 1992.

British Telecom

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information has been given to his Department by BT plc about the expected number of redundancies of each grade of employee for the year April 1994 to March 1995.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information given to the Department under the statutory redundancy handling provisions is provided in confidence.

Redundancies

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now introduce legislation requiring companies to consult representatives of their employees on redundancies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Employers have been required since 1975 to consult recognised trade unions about proposed redundancies. The Government are presently considering what changes need to be made to those arrangements following a recent ruling by the European Court of Justice.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the percentage of the total work force working under 20 hours per week for (a) 1984 and (b) 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the labour force survey for Great Britain show that 11·7 per cent. of employees and self-employed people usually worked fewer than 20 hours per week in their main job in spring 1984, compared with 13·6 per cent. in winter 1993-94.

Training

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what process his Department monitors companies which provide training or initiate quotations as training providers; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils contract directly with training providers. The TEC operating agreement between the Department and TECs sets out the monitoring requirements placed on them in a number of areas to ensure that their providers give value for money and that the use of public funds is managed in a robust and efficient manner.

Cathedral Employment Enterprises

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help, financial or other, his Department is prepared to offer Cathedral Employment Enterprises; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department does not contract directly with providers for training—other than the Employment Service for job clubs. Therefore, it is not in a position to give financial support to Cathedral Employment Enterprises. The ES currently has around £20,000 owing to Cathedral and is waiting to be advised by Cathedral's accountants of new arrangements for paying this figure. Both the ES and South Thames training and enterprise council, with which Cathedral had substantial contracts, gave Cathedral's invoices priority treatment to ease its cash-flow problems. All three TECs that currently have contracts with Cathedral, and the ES, are making alternative arrangements to help those trainees affected.

HEALTH

Bullying (NHS Staff)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department intends to take to eliminate the bullying of national health staff at work.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for individual national health service employers, who will want to take account of the general Whitley council agreement on harassment at work, copies of which are available in the Library.

South West Thames Region

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail for each financial year since 1990-91 the resource allocation, per head of population, for each health district in the old South West Thames region.

Mr. Sackville: The per capita spend for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 is shown in the table. Comparisons of those per capita spend figures need to be treated with caution. First, not all the expenditure covered arises from population related activities. Secondly, crude populations do not reflect differences in age structure or relative health care need. Those differences feature in the formulae used to inform the main allocations made to district health authorities. Thirdly, before 1991-92, DHAs were funded for their catchment populations and not for their resident populations.

Community Care Policy

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the cost of providing public-funded residential care for people in England who have returned to, or remained within, the community under the community care policy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The policy of replacing long-stay hospitals when appropriate with a range of health and social services in the community has been pursued by successive Governments over many years. It is not therefore possible accurately to estimate either the total or the current cost of residential care solely for people discharged from long-stay hospitals and those who might in other circumstances have entered such hospitals.

IGF-1

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent of a link between IGF-1 levels in milk and serious gastro-intestinal disorders in humans; and what research her Department has undertaken into the link.

Mr. Sackville: IGF-1 is a naturally occurring hormone in humans. Human blood normally contains 10 times the concentration of IGF-1 as that found in cows' milk. Any contribution to this from ingestion of milk would be minimal.

The Department has undertaken no research into the link between IGF-1 levels in milk and serious gastro-intestinal disorders in humans.

Doctors and Dentists (Working Hours)

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctors and dentists in each region in England are contracted for more than (a) 83 hours a week or (b) 72 hours a week in on-call posts.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 31 March 1994, the returns from the 14 English regional task forces on junior doctors' hours were as follows:

Region	(a) Contracted for more than 83 hours a week	(b) Contracted for between 73 and 83 hours a week in hard-pressed on-call posts

Research Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November, Official Report, columns 240-2, if she will list for each of the 13 research units which have been subject to peer review, the date of the site visit, whether the report of the review has now been discussed with the unit, whether a decision has been made about the future of the unit and the nature of the decisions which have been made.

Dr. Mawhinney: The dates of site visits are shown in the table:

Research Unit	Site Visit Date
	Completed
Childhood Cancer Research Group	October 1991
Medical Care Research Unit	October 1992
National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit	June 1993
Social Medicine and Health Services Research Unit	July 1993

Research Unit	Site Visit Date
Centre for Primary Care Research	July 1993
Cancer Screening Evaluation Unit	October 1993
National Institute for Social Work	October 1993
Clinical Operational Research Unit	November 1993
Social Policy Research Unit	January 1994
Thomas Coram Research Unit	March 1994
Personal Social Services Research Unit	April 1994
Dartington Social Research Unit	April 1994
Centre for Health Economics	(planned for July 1994)

With the exception of the centre for health economics, where the visit has yet to take place, the conclusions of the site visit teams are now being prepared.

Latest developments regarding some of the units visited early in the programme are as follows:

National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit
Announcements have been made about the appointment of a new Director and the appointment process is currently in train.

Centre for Primary Care Research
Won a competitive tender for new Research Centre funding. I announced this on 21 February 1994.

Social Medicine and Health Services Research Unit
A new Director has been appointed and discussions are taking place about a new programme of work.

Discussions are currently taking place with the directors of the cancer screening evaluation unit, the childhood cancer research group, the medical care research unit and the clinical operational research unit.

The remaining units work in personal social services. They were visited and reviewed later in the cycle of visits. In respect of the National Institute for Social Work, the report of the reviewing panel has been sent formally to the institute's director. The review team's report on the social policy research unit has also been completed and will shortly be sent formally to the unit's director. Reports on the remainder are nearing completion. Decisions on those units will be taken as soon as possible.

Grants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount of grant which could have been claimed by each local authority, and how much was claimed by each authority, for (a) community care special transitional grant, (b) projects working with people with HIV-related illness and (c) for other health and community care projects, in each year for which such grants were claimable.

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 6 May 1994]: The community care special transitional grant was allocated to local authorities on the basis of a formula for both 1993-94 and 1994-95 and not on the basis of claims made. Details of the allocations are set out in special grant reports 6 and 7—HC 404 and HC 405—for 1993-94 and special grant report 10—HC 218—for 1994-95, copies of which are available in the Library.

From its introduction in 1989-90 to 1993-94, local authorities were invited to submit bids for the HIV/AIDS specific grant without reference to indicative allocations but subject to an agreed national total. Details of the bids submitted and grants awarded will be placed in the Library. For 1994-95, local authorities were invited to submit expenditure plans which were assessed against indicative allocations of grant based on information provided to the Department by the Public Health Laboratory Service and available for the first time on the distribution of AIDS cases by local authority area. Details of the indicative allocations and grants awarded will be placed in the Library.

Two other specific grants support health and community care projects: they are for services for people with a mental illness and for people who misuse alcohol and drugs. For each year since its introduction in 1991-92, local authorities have been invited to bid for the mental illness specific grant against indicative allocations issued by the Department of Health. Details of the indicative allocations and the grants awarded will be placed in the Library. From its introduction in 1991-92, the alcohol and drugs specific grant has been allocated on the basis of open-ended bids invited by the Department of Health from local authorities supporting voluntary sector projects. Information about the original bids made could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Details of the successful bids made by voluntary organisations for each year since 1991-92, together with details of the local authority supporting each project, will be placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Public Borrowing

12. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the economy of maintaining the current level of public borrowing.

Mr. Portillo: Had we not taken effective action to put public finances on a sound and sustainable basis, confidence would have been severely damaged and the recovery weakened.

Profit Share Tax Relief Schemes

13. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what analysis he has made of the efficacy of profit share tax relief schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: An evaluation of the tax relief for profit-related pay has been commissioned by the Inland Revenue, the Department of Employment and the Treasury, and is currently under way.

Alcohol and Tobacco (Illegal Imports)

14. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the volume of illegal imports of alcohol and tobacco.

Sir John Cope: The law prescribes severe penalties of up to seven years' imprisonment and unlimited fines for smuggling. Customs and Excise have deployed specially assigned staff and intelligence directed checks are used to seek out illicit goods. When cases are detected, the contraband is seized and in some cases the vehicle, too. Prosecutions have resulted in fines and custodial sentences.

Growth Forecast

15. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for growth during the current financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are now facing the prospect of sustained growth and low inflation. I am forecasting that the economy will grow by 2¼ per cent. in both 1994 and 1995.

Labour Statistics

17. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what economic conclusions he draws from the most recent unemployment figures.

Mr. Portillo: Unemployment has now fallen by over 300,000 since December 1992, much sooner and much faster than most people expected. In part that reflects the improved labour markets flexibility resulting from our supply-side reforms.

VAT (Average Payments)

18. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much an average family paid per week in VAT in (a) 1979 and (b) 1993; and what he estimates this figure will be in 1994.

Sir John Cope: A couple with two children on average earnings paid VAT of £12·95 per week in 1979-80, in 1993-94 prices, and an estimated £19·48 per week in 1993-94. Since 1978-79, the real take-home pay of such a family has risen by £83 per week.

Taxation Changes

19. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on changes in taxation.

Mr. Dorrell: I have received a wide range of representations on changes in taxation.

Income Tax

20. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many more people will pay income tax this year than last year; and what proportion of these are pensioners.

Mr. Dorrell: The total number of income tax payers is expected on increase by 300,000 in 1994-95, mainly because of increases in income. About 70,000 of the increase in the respect of taxpayers aged 65 and over.

24. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Government income tax policies over the last 15 years.

Mr. Dorrell: Since 1979, Government policy has been to reduce marginal rates of income tax, whenever it has been prudent to do so, to sharpen incentives to work and create wealth.

28. Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he estimates will be raised by the Treasury in (a) 1994-95, (b) 1995-96 and (c) 1996-97 from the freezing of personal income tax allowances.

Mr. Dorrell: That information was given in table 4.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994-95" published on 30 November 1993.

Value Added Tax

21. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total revenue raised by value added tax in the last financial year; and what will be the likely value added tax take in the current financial year.

Sir John Cope: Net VAT receipts by Customs and Excise amounted to £39,248 million in 1993-94. The forecast for 1994-95 is £43,400 million.

Training

22. Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much Government investment in training will be cut next year.

Mr. Portillo: The Government's spending plans for the years 1995-96 to 1997-98 will be announced at the time of the Budget in the normal way.

Film Industry

23. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the need to review the tax regime to encourage film producers to use British facilities.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received no recent representations.

Public Sector Investment

25. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much public sector investment will change over the next three years, as measured by public sector asset creation; and if he will estimate by how much public sector investment has changed in real terms since 1989-90.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is provided in the following table:

Public Sector Asset Creation, 1989-90 to 1996-97

£ billion

	Cash	Real[1]
1989-90	29·2	34·8
1990-91	28·8	31·8
1991-92	28·5	29·5
1992-93	29·0	29·0
1993-94	29·3	28·4
1994-95	28·8	26·8
1995-96	29·3	26·3
1996-97	29·8	26·1

German GDP

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the revised OECD estimate in respect of the change in the level of German gross domestic product in 1994.

Mr. Nelson: The OECD, along with most forecasters, has revised upwards its estimates of the growth in German gross domestic product for 1994. The OECD now expects growth in Germany to be 1·8 per cent. in 1994. That compares with its projection for United Kingdom growth in 1994 of 2·8 per cent.

VAT (Standing Charges)

27. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received over the adding of value added tax on standing charges for gas and electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I have received a large number of representations, both from right hon. and hon. Members and from members of the public. I have made it clear on a number of occasions that the standing charge has always been regarded as part of the consideration for a single supply of fuel and power. If it were not, it would have been liable to VAT at the standard rate since 1 April 1973 and would be liable at that rate now.

Royal Family (Tax Returns)

29. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he has made for the market testing of the office dealing with the tax returns of the Royal Family.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue's current market testing programme consists of typing, secretarial, information technology and ancillary support services. If such services were to be transferred to a private sector organisation, the Inland Revenue would remain responsible for continuing to ensure proper standards of privacy and confidentiality for all citizens. Confidentiality is not a bar to market testing, but the Inland Revenue would need to be sure that an outside contractor could replicate existing security procedures and conditions.

Manufacturing Sector

30. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will next meet the Engineering Employers Federation to discuss ways in which he could stimulate the country's manufacturing sector.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans at present to meet the Engineering Employers Federation. My hon. Friend the Financial Secretary attended a presentation by it on 11 May and spoke to its council on 15 June. My officials have had regular contacts with the EEF over the last year.

Income Statistics

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average equivalised income at current prices for 1979 and 1992 of (i) single-parent households, (ii) two-parent households with (a) one child, (b) two children and (c) three or more children, and (iii) other households with children, by quintile groups of households; and if he will make a statement on the unavailability of such information at other than current prices.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 July 1993, Official Report, column 238, for the figures for 1979. The figures for 1992 are in the table.

Average equivalised disposable income by household type and by quintile groups

£ million

1992	Quintile groups of all households ranked by equivalised disposable income
Household type	Bottom	2nd	3rd	4th	Top	All households
One adult with children	5,275	7,816	11,106	15,892	27,471	8,449
Two adults with one child	4,635	8,140	11,416	15,883	30,236	16,117
Two adults with two children	4,875	8,231	11,297	15,837	28,369	13,899
Two adults with three or more children	4,924	8,085	11,190	15,877	27,524	11,052
Other households with children	5,137	8,092	11,377	15,834	24,362	11,578

The quintile groups are based on all households ranked by equivalised disposable income. The difference between the average equivalised disposable income of household types within each quintile group is affected by the composition of the quintile group and the distribution of the incomes of the different household types within the quintile group.

Those figures are not strictly comparable over time because of changes in classification of both income and taxation and because of changes in the family expenditure survey.

The information is taken from an analysis published in "Economic Trends" which examines the differential impact of taxes and benefits on households at different income levels in the given year. It provides five measures of income and appropriate deflators have not been developed across the range of measures. For the particular measure of disposable income, a possible deflator would be the all-items retail prices index, excluding local taxes.

EEC Membership Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now publish a White Paper setting out the effect on (a) jobs, (b) the balance of payments and (c) food prices in the United Kingdom of joining the EEC.

Mr. Nelson: No. I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 17 March, Official Report, column 822, and the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave on 18 May, Official Report, column 470, in answer to very similar questions from the hon. Member.

Price Increases

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of production industries as described in tables 7.1, 9 and 10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" for which he has evidence of price increases in excess of that required to provide a return on capital sufficient to enable the industry to maintain its United Kingdom assets at current rates of exchange.

Mr. Nelson: Price indices of the output of manufacturing industry are published in table 18.6 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics". Information on required rates of return on capital is not available.

Money Supply

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account is taken of the level of employment in the Government's policy on increases in the money supply.

Mr. Nelson: It is the role of monetary policy to deliver low inflation. Decisions are based on an assessment of a range of indicators including the money supply and estimates of spare capacity in the economy. The minutes of the monthly monetary meetings with the Governor of the Bank of England set out the basis for monetary policy decisions and are now published.

Investment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what fiscal measures he is taking to encourage investment in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government are taking a number of measures to encourage investment:

(i) in his November Budget last year my right hon. and learned Friend announced three tax measures to attract equity investment into unlisted companies: the Enterprise Investment Scheme, Venture Capital Trusts and an extension of Capital Gains Tax reinvestment relief;

(ii) the Government now make a clear distinction between capital and current spending in the fiscal projections. This recognises that capital spending generates a future stream of benefits which current spending does not;

(iii) the Private Finance Initiative will lead to more and better capital projects by allowing the public sector to draw on private sector management skills and financial resources.

More generally, the Government have delivered the best possible economic environment for investment: low inflation, low interest rates and a clear strategy to reduce the PSBR, all of which provide the key to sustainable growth.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the cost of local government reform in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a number of representations on the cost of local government reform from interested parties, including the hon. Member.

English Wine

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the level of tax on English wine; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Each year, before making his budget decisions, the Chancellor of the Exchequer reviews the level of taxation on alcoholic beverages, including wine. Consideration is given to a wide range of social, economic and health factors as well as the revenue effect.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Benefits

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 402, if he will set out the severance benefits including pension, life insurance policies or grants that are available to Members of the European Parliament which are not available to hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: As I said in my answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 402, resettlement grants and pensions are available to Members of the European Parliament and Members of this House on the same basis.

There are differences in the arrangements for the reimbursement of expenses and other allowances. Payments of this kind to Members of the European Parliament are the responsibility of the European Parliament, but I am not aware of any payments from that source which relate to severance.

1 Parliament Street

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee how many meals have been sold each day since the opening of Bellamy's Club dining room at 1 Parliament street; how the takings differ from those of the former coffee lounge; and what representations he has received from staff now excluded from the two rooms.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The conversion of the Clubroom, on a trial basis, was undertaken in response to representations from Members. Numerous representations have been received from staff now excluded from the two rooms, but it is as yet too early to form an opinion regarding the long-term viability of the new Clubroom. I understand that the Director of Catering Services intends to review the operation of the Clubroom after Christmas. The Catering Committee will wish to be informed of the results of that review and will then also consider the representations which it has received.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee how much the recent adaptions to the coffee bar and lounge in the Parliament street buildings has cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: I understand from the Director of Catering Services that the new servery counters purchased for Bellamy's Clubroom cost £25,849, paid from funds available in the Refreshment Department trading account. No costs have been incurred by the House of Commons works vote or administration vote. The servery counters have been specifically designed for flexibility of use and can, if necessary, be used for other purposes in the Refreshment Department.

Visually Impaired Visitors

Mr. McMaster: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what information is available in Braille to blind and visually impaired people visiting the House; if he will review how the availability of this information is advertised in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: Braille guides, which include a tactile map of the Line of Route, are available from the Serjeant at Arms and braille guides to the Galleries are available from the Admissions Order Office and Doorkeepers on request. These guides are described in the leaflet "Arrangements for the Assistance of Disabled Visitors", which is available from the Sergeant at Arms Office and reception desks in the outbuildings. The current inquiry by the Accommodation and Works Committee into ways of improving access for disabled people visiting the Palace includes consideration of the provisions made for blind and partially sighted visitors.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the role of the Organisation of African Unity's observer mission in Burundi: what countries contribute personnel; and how the British Government have responded to its appeal for financial and logistical support.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The OAU mission is to assist in restoring democratic institutions, rebuilding confidence and stabilising the situation in Burundi. Niger, Burkina Faso, Mali, Cameroon, Tunisia and Egypt have contributed personnel.

We have no plans to contribute towards this initiative. The United Kingdom has already committed $1 million to the United Nations Trust Fund for Liberia and we anticipate that others, who did not contribute to this fund, will take the lead in Burundi.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the French Government about its proposed military mission in Rwanda; and what assessment he has made about France's suitability for military involvement after its past involvement in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have supported the French initiative. A military mission as authorised by Security Council resolution 929 has a specific and restricted humanitarian mandate.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what terms and conditions he has put on his support for the French initiative in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the terms of SCR 929, France is required to co-ordinate its initiative closely with the United Nations, and to complete its mission within two months.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya about ethnic clashes in the country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Ethnic clashes are a major concern. We raise the issue regularly with the Kenyan authorities at all levels.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what human rights issues he has raised with the Government of Kenya in the past year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Human rights issues such as ethnic clashes and press freedom feature prominently in our regular discussions at all levels with the Kenyan Government.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the European Union about the issues involved in continued support for Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We discuss regularly with our EU partners all issues relevant to continued support for Kenya.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the role of the Kenyan Government in ethnic clashes; and what representations he has made on this subject.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are concerned at continued ethnic clashes in Kenya and regularly make our concerns known to the appropriate authorities. We were recently more reassured by the Government's speedy action to contain violence in the Rift valley.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent British oil interests in the Ogoni area of Rivers state in Nigeria are being damaged by political unrest; and what representations he has made to the Nigerian Government on this issue.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I understand that the political unrest in the Ogoni area has led to a significant reduction in output from the Shell/AGIP/Elf joint venture with the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation. The oil companies concerned have made representations to the Nigerian Government for a greater share of the oil revenue to be expended in the oil producing area.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking further to improve the United Kingdom's relationship with Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We value our relationship with Nigeria and maintain close contact with the Nigerian Government through our high commission. We look forward to progress towards a restoration of democratic civilian government, which would permit closer relations to develop.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the possible impact on the United Kingdom, its investors, and its exporters, if further economic sanctions were to be imposed limiting trade with Nigeria; if he will make it his policy to oppose the introduction of any such sanctions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We and our European Union partners have introduced a number of measures directed at Nigeria's military Government to demonstrate our strong support for a return to democratic civilian rule. It is not the intention that such measures should harm economic relations.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the plight of the Ogoni people in the Rivers state of Nigeria; what view he has formed on this; and what representations he has made to the Nigerian Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received a number of representations on this matter from hon. Members and from the public. The problems in Rivers state are rooted in a complex set of issues. The Nigerian Government are fully aware, through our contacts with them, of the importance that we attach to human rights.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Nigerian high commissioner; and what was discussed at that meeting.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Nigerian high commissioner to London briefly at the diplomatic banquet on 17 June. A wide range of issues are discussed in the course of regular diplomatic contacts with the high commissioner.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the announcement by the Nigerian Government of its federal government political programme; and what steps he is taking to assist the work of the local government caretaker committee, the national constitutional conference, and other bodies established by the Nigerian authorities to prepare the ground for further movement towards democracy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave her on 28 June, Official Report, columns 525-26. We are not familiar with the work of the local government caretaker committee. We do, however, welcome the start of the national constitutional conference, and hope to see firm progress towards democratic, civilian rule.

Diplomatic Entertaining Costs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of entertaining foreign guests at each British high commission situated in each other Commonwealth country in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Expenditure on official entertainment in 1993 at British high commissions overseas was £1,343,538. It is our practice not to publish how this is divided between posts.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of entertaining foreign guests at each British embassy situated in each other EU country in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Expenditure on official entertainment in 1993 at British embassies in European Union countries was £1,595,717. It is our practice not to publish how this is divided between posts.

Switzerland

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 178, if he will propose that regulations with Switzerland on bilateral agreements include extradition for tax evasion.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Foreign Affairs Council agreed in November 1993 that the priority areas for negotiations with Switzerland were road transport, aviation, research, free movement of people, trade in agricultural goods, public procurement and technical barriers to trade. Extradition is not a matter of Community competence. The United Kingdom has reciprocal extradition arrangements with Switzerland through the Council of Europe convention on extradition, but tax offences are not covered since, unlike the United Kingdom, Switzerland is not party to the relevant section of the second protocol to the convention.

Turkish Cypriots

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the movement of Turkish Cypriots into the United Kingdom from Cyprus.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A person who is neither a British citizen nor a Commonwealth citizen with right of abode nor an EEA national would need to fulfil the requirements of the immigration rules in order to be admitted to the United Kingdom.

ENVIRONMENT

Sewerage Pipe

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 393, what are the statutory obligations relating to pollution that concern the standards of equipment used to transport sewage.

Mr. Atkins: There are none applying to equipment and sewers. It is up to the water companies how they comply with the conditions attached to discharge consents issued by the National Rivers Authority and more generally how they avoid infringing other requirements relating to pollution.

Minis Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish his departmental Minis report 15.

Mr. Gummer: I expect to publish Minis 15 during July.

Drinking Water

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 344, how many times the drinking water inspectorate has been informed by water companies of incidents which affected, or threatened to affect, drinking water quality (a) for each year since 2 January 1990 and (b) by each company.

Mr. Atkins: The numbers of incidents reported to the drinking water inspectorate during the years 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993 were 79, 59, 56 and 52 respectively. Additionally, for those years there were 24 informal notifications where, although the water companies had been concerned about a threat to drinking water quality, it did not materialise; these are classified as non-incidents. For 1994, up to 8 June, 25 notifications have been received. The total number of notifications for the period 2 January 1990 to 8 June 1994 was 295.

Most of the incidents were minor happenings. A typical reported incident is one where some failure in the system resulted in a company advising consumers to boil their water as a precautionary measure while the microbiological quality of the water was carefully investigated.

Data on individual companies, showing the number of incidents reported each year, is as tabulated.

Incidents by company for years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993 and to 24 June 1994

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tests in each year since 1990 by water companies of compliance with the standards for drinking water did not demonstrate compliance with the relevant water quality standards (a) by year and (b) by water company.

Mr. Atkins: Each year, the companies collectively carry out a total of around 3·75 million tests on drinking water. These data are audited by the drinking water inspectorate. In 1992, 98·7 per cent. of these tests demonstrated compliance with the standards. Of the 1·3 per cent. which demonstrated non-compliance with standards, there is no evidence that any of these contraventions was of such a magnitude or duration as to endanger the health of consumers.

The breakdown of the results by company are given in the table for the years 1990, 1991 and 1992. Data for 1993 are being processed and will be published in the drinking water inspectorate's next annual report.

Foleshill Gas Works

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current position concerning negotiations with British Gas on the redevelopment of the Foleshill gas works site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for English Partnerships and British Gas. However, I understand that negotiations are continuing on the basis of English Partnerships's earlier proposal of grant and a possible joint venture to cover the two parts of the site.

Sea Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the outcome of the Paris Commission meeting on sea pollution held in Karlskrona, Sweden, indicating the decisions taken and the United Kingdom position in each instance.

Mr. Atkins: The annual joint meeting of the commissions established by the 1972 Oslo convention for the prevention of marine pollution by dumping from ships and aircraft and the 1974 Paris convention for the prevention of marine pollution from land-based sources took place in Karlskrona from 13 to 17 June. The commissions consist of representatives of the contracting parties, which are the littoral states of the north-east Atlantic and the European Community.

The commissions reviewed progress in implementing the conventions and in bringing into force the 1992 convention on the protection of the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic, and took a number of decisions about their future internal organisations. They adopted the following decisions and recommendations under the conventions—decisions bind those contracting parties that accept them; recommendations have no binding force. They are:

a. PARCOM Recommendation 94/1 on best available techniques for new aluminium electrolysis plants: adopted by a three-quarters majority with reservations by Germany and the UK; the UK reservation was entered because the recommendation selected only certain features from the agreed description of best available techniques and therefore risked distorting the effects of the description, because the emission limit values were only specified in relation to production volumes and not to total emissions, and because no target date was set for bringing emissions from existing plants within the emission limit values for new plants, which could distort competition;

b. PARCOM Recommendation 94/2 on best available techniques and best environmental practice for the integrated and non-integrated sulphite paper pulp industry: adopted by a three-quarters majority with reservations by France, by Portugal and by the UK (for the same reasons, in part, as with Recommendation 94/1);

c. PARCOM Recommendation 94/3 on best available techniques and best environmental practice for the integrated and non-integrated kraft pulp industry: adopted by a three quarters majority with reservations by France and by the UK (for the same reasons, in part, as with Recommendation 94/1);

d. PARCOM Recommendation 94/4 on best available techniques for the organic chemical industry: adopted by a three-quarters majority with reservations by the UK and Portugal; the UK reservation was entered because the four-page recommendation was too superficial for such a complex subject;

e. PARCOM Recommendation 94/5 concerning best available techniques and best environmental practice for wet processes in the textile processing industry: adopted by a three-quarters majority with reservations by Portugal and by the UK (for the same reasons, in part, as with Recommendation 94/1).

f. PARCOM Decision 94/1 on substances/preparations used and discharged offshore: adopted by a three-quarters majority with reservations by France, by the European Community, by Spain and by the UK; the UK reservation was entered because the decision gave no basis for the selection of the substances named in it and thus cut across the collective work already successfully being undertaken to develop a harmonised control system;

g. PARCOM Recommendation 94/6 on best environmental practice for the reduction of inputs of potentially toxic chemicals from aquaculture use: adopted by a three-quarters majority with reservations by Belgium, by Spain and by the UK; the UK reservation was entered because the Recommendation does not adequately describe best environmental practice;

h. PARCOM Recommendation 94/7 on the elaboration of national action plans and best environmental practice for the reduction of inputs to the environment of pesticides from agricultural use: adopted unanimously; this Recommendation amended last year's Recommendation on the same subject;

i. PARCOM Recommendation 94/8 concerning environmental impact resulting from discharges of radioactive substances: adopted unanimously; this Recommendation commits the Commissions to further review of the environmental impacts of radioactive discharges, past and present;

j. PARCOM Recommendation 94/9 concerning the management of spent nuclear fuel: adopted unanimously; this Recommendation commits the Commissions to requesting the Nuclear Energy Agency of the OECD to carry out a review of the management of spent nuclear fuel.

The Commissions also discussed a number of other draft recommendations and decisions which failed to achieve a three-quarters majority. These are to be studied further. The Commissions also agreed that the difficulties seen by the United Kingdom in a number of the recommendations and decisions were of importance for establishing future recommendations and decisions, and should be looked into during the forthcoming year.

North Sea Pollution

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures have been taken to control the discharge of industrial effluent into the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Under the Water Resources Act 1991, discharges of effluent to rivers and coastal waters require the consent of the relevant regulatory authority—the National Rivers Authority for England and Wales. Consents are designed to ensure that the receiving waters meet environmental quality standards. In addition, the Environmental Protection Act 1990 introduced a system of integrated pollution control for industrial processes with the most potential for polluting releases. Tight control of discharges has led to a progressive reduction in United Kingdom inputs of the most hazardous substances to the North sea, in line with international commitments made at North sea conferences.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to monitor chemical pollution of the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The marine pollution monitoring management group, consisting of scientists from the relevant Government Departments and regulatory authorities, has prepared a national monitoring plan, which is implemented by the agencies with statutory monitoring responsibilities. This is based on a network of inshore, estuarine and offshore monitoring sites. This provides comprehensive information on the seas around the United Kingdom and formed the basis of the United Kingdom input to the monitoring master plan of the North sea task force, which was established by the North sea states, inter alia, to prepare the North sea quality status report, which was published in March this year.

Cleveland

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the Prime Minister's oral answer to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) of 16 June, Official Report, column 754, regarding consultation on local government reorganisation in Rutland and Huntingdon, if he will make it his policy to ensure that every household in Cleveland is also consulted on the future of local government in its area.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend's decisions on the future local government of Cleveland, which were announced on 18 January, took into account the extensive local consultation undertaken by the Local Government Commission, as well as the representations we received on the Commission's final recommendations for the area.

Council Tax Appeals

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against council tax banding have been received to date; how many have already been decided; and how many are expected to have been decided by (a) 31 December 1994 and (b) 31 March 1995.

Mr. Curry: The Valuation Office Agency received 909,365 banding appeals in respect of dwellings in England by the end of May, of which 363,542 had already been settled. Around 690,000 appeals are expected to be settled before 31 December 1994 and around 793,000 before 31 March 1995.

Hazardous Wastes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which developing country parties to the Basel convention have replied to the European Commission indicating (a) they do not want to receive exports of green list wastes as classified by the OECD and (b) they would like the red and amber list procedures applied to green list wastes; and what measures he intends to take to respect their wishes.

Mr. Atkins: We understand from the European Commission that the following non-OECD parties to the Basel convention have said that they do not wish to receive shipments of any "green list" waste from the European Community:

Chile
Indonesia
Maldives
Saudi Arabia
Senegal

Seychelles
St. Lucia
Tanzania

Brazil and the Republic of Korea have said that they would allow imports of some green list wastes. The following non-OECD parties to the Basel convention have said that they wish amber or red list procedures to apply to shipments of green list waste from the European Community:

Argentina
Czech Republic
Estonia
India
Malaysia
Mexico
Poland
Trinidad and Tobago

Discussions are taking place within the European Community on appropriate action.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment with which parties and non-parties to the Basel convention the United Kingdom has established bilateral agreements for the import or export of hazardous waste; and what steps he has taken to prohibit imports of hazardous waste from (a) the United States and (b) other non-parties under article 4.5 of the Basel convention.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom has concluded no bilateral agreements under article 11 of the Basel convention. Imports of hazardous waste into the United Kingdom from non-parties to the convention, other than imports of waste destined for recovery from OECD countries, are prohibited by Council regulation (EEC) No. 259/93. It is for competent authorities to ensure compliance with the provisions of the regulation.

Colchester (Officials' Visits)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons the EC paid for the mayor of Colchester, the town clerk and the community services director of Colchester borough council to visit Argos in Greece; under what programme this expenditure was made; who authorised it; how much is to be spent on such trips in the current year; which EC official is responsible; and to which director general in the Commission he is answerable.

Mr. Curry: I understand that the visit was made under the EC's exchange of experience programme, which is run by DG XVI of the Commission. In the United Kingdom, the programme is managed by the Local Government International Bureau, which is sponsored by the local authority associations. Participation in the programme is a matter for individual authorities.

British Waterways Board

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the British Waterways Board has responded to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the service provided by the BWB; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have today placed in the Library of the House the British Waterways Board's initial response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which was published in January 1994.

I am grateful to the commission for the extensive review of the British Waterways Board which it has undertaken. I am happy to report that, in addition to meeting its statutory duties, the MMC found an organisation which has been transformed by devolving responsibility from the centre to individual waterways, the overall performance of which has been improved, and which is developing a strong commercial outlook. The enthusiasm and dedication of staff and their substantial achievements since the MMC's last report in 1987 have been commended. The commission concluded that the BWB must aim to strike the right balance between sustaining the considerable progress already made in developing its commercial ethos and discharging its wider responsibilities, especially for conservation. It made 48 recommendations aimed at securing further improvements in the BWB's performance, in particular in expanding its share of the leisure market. I welcome and endorse the commission's recognition of the BWB's achievements and its constructive recommendations for the future.

I also welcome the BWB's positive response to the MMC's report, which demonstrates a firm commitment to improving the efficiency of the business. Most of the commission's recommendations have been accepted in whole or in part and many have already been implemented. Where appropriate, the board has embarked upon further work as recommended by the MMC. I am satisfied that the BWB has addressed fully those recommendations which have not been accepted. I support the board's programme of seeking increased private sector involvement in the business through market testing and contracting out and I am pleased that the BWB has taken steps to explore potential in the leisure market and to improve relations with its customers.

A number of recommendations would require action either by the Government or jointly by the Government and the BWB. We are keen that the BWB should develop its commercial approach and, with the new chairman, Mr. Bernard Henderson, will be reviewing the board's strategy during 1994-95, in particular the prospects for increasing private sector—including voluntary sector—participation in the BWB's business. This will include consideration of the criteria against which strategic options for the future should be assessed and corporate planning and targets. In the light of the MMC's recommendations we shall also look at appointments to the board and the time that the chairman needs to spend on board matters. We have already confirmed arrangements with the BWB over the treatment of proceeds from property disposals. We are taking into account, as the opportunity arises, the MMC's recommendations on radio communications, development of the BWB's property, development control, dredging tips, wayleaves and inland waterway commercial transport.

I shall continue to monitor the BWB's progress in implementing the MMC's recommendations and will report to the House in due course.

Warrington Borough Council

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take against Warrington borough council following the notice served on the authority on 17 February, under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988, in respect of street cleaning work.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the response which Warrington borough council has made to the notice served earlier this year and has today given a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988. The effect of the direction is to require the authority to seek the Secretary of State's consent if it wishes to award street cleaning work to their Direct Service Organisation again when the current arrangements expire in 1997.

Local Government Earnings

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each local authority area and for England as a whole, for the latest available date, the average earnings of local government employees.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 29 June 1994]: Information on the earnings of employees in local government is available from the "New Earnings Survey". The table gives the average weekly earnings of all employees in the local government sector for each county area for London boroughs and for England as a whole. The figures include employees of both district and county councils. Information on individual county and district councils is not held centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are (a) the names of all members of the Northern Ireland tourist board, (b) the organisation each member represents, (c) the perceived religious affiliation of each member, (d) the date of appointment and the period of such appointment, (e) the political party affiliation of each member and (f) the council area of Northern Ireland in which each member resides.

Mr. Tim Smith: Members do not represent an organisation, but are appointed on merit. Personal information on religious and political affiliation cannot be disclosed. The other information requested is as follows.

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Name	Date of Appointment	Period of Appointment	Northern Ireland Council Area in which Member Resides
Hon. Hugh O'Neill (Chairman)	1 July 1994	2 Years	Ballymena Borough Council
Mr. Brian Adgey	1 April 1993	3 Years	Ards Borough Council
Mr. Roy Bailie	1 July 1994	3 Years	Antrim Borough Council
Mr. Gerry Burns, MBE	1 July 1994	3 Years	Fermanagh District Council
Mrs. Annie Courtney	1 July 1994	3 Years	Derry City Council
Mr. Tony Hopkins	1 April 1992	3 Years	North Down Borough Council
Mr. Alan Lambert	1 April 1994	3 Years	Great Britain Resident
Mr. William McGinnis	1 July 1994	3 Years	Magherafelt District Council
Dr. Mary Peters, CBE	1 April 1993	3 Years	Lisburn Borough Council

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria he applies when selecting persons for appointment to the Northern Ireland tourist board.

Mr. Tim Smith: Appointments are made on the basis of an individual's experience and expertise and potential to contribute to the functions of the tourist board.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the current members of the Northern Ireland tourist board have a career background in (a) the hotel, (b) the catering and (c) the tourist sectors.

Mr. Tim Smith: The NITB chairman, the hon. Hugh O'Neill, and Mr. Brian Adgey have a career background in these fields. Other members bring further experience in financial and business matters, local/regional issues and PR/events management.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what were the conclusions of the Fair Employment Commission on the areas from which the work force of Howden Sirocco is drawn; which of those areas were omitted from the catchment area on which the quotas were set for applications and appointees; and what was the reason for the omission of each of those areas;

(2) how many of the employees of the Sunblest bakery at Orby Link, Castlereagh, were found by the Fair Employment Commission to be drawn from the district council areas of North Down and Ards;

(3) in how many of the cases setting the quotas for applicants and appointees specified in the affirmative action programmes published by the Fair Employment Commission in June, the commission omitted the requirement that all appointments will be made on the basis of merit; and for what reasons in each case;

(4) which district council areas were omitted in the affirmative action programme published by the Fair Employment Commission in June for the Sunblest bakery at Orby Link, Castlereagh from the catchment area on which the quotas set for applications and appointees are based; and for what reason in each case.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is primarily a matter for the Fair Employment Commission. I am satisfied that in agreeing affirmative action programmes with firms, the Fair Employment Commissioin acts with due regard to all the circumstances of each particular case. The content of those agreements and the data upon which they are based are a matter for the Commission and the firms concerned. Under fair employment legislation, quotas are unlawful but there is provision for setting goals and timetables—that is, targets that firms would expect and should make good faith efforts, to reach within a certain time scale.

Neil Latimer

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress there has been in the review of the conviction of Neil Latimer; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: In my reply of 22 April, Official Report, columns 721-22, I explained the criterion for the exercise of my statutory power to refer a case to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland. I pointed out that so far none of the representations received had fulfilled that criterion.

Since then, I have given consideration to the points raised about Mr. Latimer's conviction during an Adjournment debate on 23 February and have requested further material. When I have received and considered it I shall write to all those hon. Members who have made representations to me in recent months about this case.

Lisnevin Training School

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of children who are currently being held in Lisnevin training school, by (a) age, (b) sex, (c) ethnic origin and (d) legislation under which they are being held; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The number of children detained in Lisnevin training school on Friday 24 June 1994 is as follows:

Sir John Wheeler: The number of children received into Lisnevin training school in the (a) special unit; (b) remand unit; and (c) PACE remand categories are given in the tables.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the occupancy rate of Lisnevin training school (a) as a total and (b) broken down by age for each month since January 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: Lisnevin training school is registered to accommodate up to 40 children—15 special unit places and 25 remand unit places.

The average occupancy figure for each month since January 1990 is shown in the table.

Note: Breakdown by age could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current re-offending rate for children leaving Lisnevin training school; if he will place a copy of research into this matter in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: Research into reconviction rates for those young persons who had been at Lisnevin was commissioned by the Northern Ireland Office in 1990. The draft report was submitted in October 1993. It contains information which would suggest that the average reconviction rates for those leaving the special unit at Lisnevin after one year is 37 per cent. which rises to 85 per cent. after three years. The latter figure should not be attributed to the effects of the secure environment because the young person has long since returned to the crimogenic environment from whence he originally came. The researcher is presently working on a final version of the report, a copy of which, when it is published, will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the riot which occurred in Lisnevin training school over Easter 1994, with particular reference to (a) how the incident started, (b) how long it lasted, (c) how many children were involved, (d) how many children were hurt in the riot and (e) how much damage was caused by the riot.

Sir John Wheeler: There was no riot, but an incident did occur at 7.30 pm on 5 April when young men, evacuated to the dining room following the activation of the fire alarm, took advantage of the situation and caused damage estimated at £29,000 to that area. There were 32 young men in the establishment at that time. Control was restored at approx 10.15 pm. Two young men received hospital treatment as a result of injuries received during the disturbance.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the current inquiry into the riot at Lisnevin training school, the inquiry's terms of reference, the inquiry team's members, the progress of the report to date and the expected completion and publication dates for the inquiry report; and if he will place a copy of the inquiry report in the Library when it is available.

Sir John Wheeler: I requested an investigation into the unrest at Lisnevin on 5 April 1994. Its terms of reference were "To examine the circumstances leading up to and surrounding the unrest at Lisnevin over the Easter period in April 1994 and report to the Minister lessons to be learnt".

Membership was drawn from the criminal justice services division of the Northern Ireland Office, the social services inspectorate of the Department of Health and Social Services and the Lisnevin management board.

The report of the investigation, which is now complete, will be with me on 1 July 1994. The investigation, as is normal in such circumstances, is internal. A report therefore will not be placed in the Library.

Compensation Agency

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the business plan for 1994-95 for the Compensation Agency will be published.

Sir John Wheeler: The Compensation Agency's business plan will be published today. The plan explains the agency's business and organisation and sets out assumptions about work loads and resources which underpin the plans and targets identified for this year. I have made arrangements for copies to be placed in the Library.

Human Rights

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received the nineteenth report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The report for the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 has been published today, and copies have been laid before Parliament.

The Commission has considered a wide and varied range of matters during the period under review. They include important questions relating to the findings of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice and how they could be applied to Northern Ireland and a conclusion to the Commission's examination of the problems of under-achievement in schools. I welcome also its careful and considered views on security-related issues. They raise a number of issues which I shall keep under review.

I very much value the advice and insight which the Commission gives me on a wide range of human rights issues. The Commission's recommendations have influenced the evolution of a number of important policy proposals affecting the rights of children. I look forward to the outcome of its work on disability, and to the important contribution that it will make to the employment equality review.

Copies of my response to the Commission's 19th report and the report itself have been placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Driving Test Centres

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 333, if he will list how each driving test centre in the United Kingdom scored on the criteria listed as marked A to D in the chief executive's reply;

(2) if he will list by driving test centre the number of driving tests conducted during 1993;

(3) if he will list the driving test centres that are being considered for closure by the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. S. J. Ford. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given. An annex of figures on total tests conducted by region will be placed in the Library.

Letter from John Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 20 June 1994:

Driving Standards Agency

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the questions you raised about certain of DSA's operations.

PQ 2552/93/94

You asked about the driving test centres currently being considered for closure.

Although the Agency will continue to keep its estate under review, there are no driving test centres, in addition to the 22 announced recently, that are currently being considered for closure.

PQ 2596/93/94

You also asked by driving test centre for the number of tests conducted during 1993.

The figures are in the attached annex for the second half of the year, the first being for car tests and the second for LGV/PCV. Because of changes in the way statistics were compiled, the information for the last six months of 1993 is more readily available. Those tests conducted at occasional centres are included in the those for the main centre. I hope this will be satisfactory.

PQ 2560/93/94

Finally, you asked, pursuant to Mr. Key's reply of 24 February to Mr. Brian Donohoe, Official Report, column 333, about how each driving test centre in the United Kingdom scored on the criterion I listed as marked A to D in my reply.

In reviewing its test centre estate, the Agency did not score each and every test centre individually against the criteria quoted in my reply of 24 February. Centres were identified for consideration against the criteria based upon the experience of our Regional staff.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements have been made by his Department for private investigators to gather data on protesters against road schemes, other than the contract awarded to Bray's detective agency regarding Twyford down.

Mr. Key: As the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 28 June 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about whether any arrangements have been made for the use of private investigators, other than at Twyford Down, to gather data on protestors against road schemes.

In addition to the contract awarded to Brays Detective Agency for the M3 extension at Twyford Down, the Highways Agency have made arrangements for the gathering of information about protestors against road schemes at three other locations.

The Agency will be using the information gathered to ensure that the progress of these particular schemes, which have all successfully completed the statutory procedures, is not unduly disrupted and that they can be completed as quickly as possible.

Salisbury Bypass

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the Salisbury bypass; and what are (a) the current estimated costs, (b) the planned commencement date and (c) expected completion date of the project.

Mr. Steven Norris: The question is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nigel Jones, dated 29 June 1994:

A36 Salisbury Bypass

I am writing in response to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Transport about the A36 Salisbury Bypass. This is a matter for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

In response to the published proposals, the Highways Agency received 296 objections, 39 letters of support and 26 other representations. At the public inquiry, which ran from April 1993 to April 1994, there were 87 personal appearances. The need for the bypass and the published route is supported by Wiltshire County Council, Salisbury District Council and Salisbury's Civic Society and Chamber of Commerce. There were no objections from the statutory environmental bodies, ie the Countryside Commission, English Nature, the National Rivers Authority and English Heritage.

The estimated cost of the scheme is approximately £65M for works excluding VAT, and land. The start of construction depends upon the outcome of the recent public inquiry, the subsequent decision of the Secretaries of State for Environment and Transport and the continuing availability of funds.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions his Department has taken in respect of TECs over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement with TECs over the same period.

Mr. Norris: My Department has no responsibilities for the funding and sponsorship of TECs. The Department and its agencies have dealt with local TECs in connection with work to meet the investors in people standard in respect of the Department's own staff. The Department has also worked with appropriate TECs in their role in the regeneration of local economies. TEC resource centres have been used to preview training material and staff have occasionally attended events sponsored by TECs.

Passenger Rail Franchises

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the Franchising Director to publish the minimum specification requirements for proposed passenger train franchises.

Mr. Freeman: The Franchising Director will be formally consulting local authorities and rail users consultative committees on the proposed specifications for franchises before inviting tenders. I expect the first of those consultations to take place early next year.

I understand that the Franchising Director is also intending to submit for comment his overall approach to setting such specifications, as the policy on this is further developed.

Railtrack

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the Railtrack board since 1 April.

Mr. Freeman: Railtrack began operations as planned on 1 April as a separate Government-owned company following many months of work to put the necessary organisation and contracts in place. Railtrack has successfully established itself as the owner and operator of the national railway infrastructure.

Rail Consultants

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Shandwick Consultants is being paid by (a) the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and (b) by his Department; and what is its remit.

Mr. Freeman: Payment to Shandwick Consultants by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Department of Transport will be by reference to hourly rates for work done. For commercial reasons, it is not the practice to disclose these rates. Shandwick Consultants's remit is to provide advice to Opraf on the marketing of franchises, and to the Department on overarching privatisation marketing issues.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the introduction of a remote sensing system to measure vehicle emissions.

Mr. Key: The Department of Transport has been undertaking research on a remote sensing emissions analyser developed with the aim of detecting "gross polluters" as they pass through a beam crossing the carriageway. Results so far are, however, disappointing and we see no immediate prospects of using such a device as means of assessing vehicle emissions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to improve and encourage proper levels of vehicle maintenance to reduce emissions.

Mr. Key: The Government have already adopted a number of measures. Since September 1992, heavy diesel-powered vehicles have been required to meet specified smoke limits based on an instrumented test carried out at the annual inspection. The test was extended to diesel cars and other light vehicles from February this year as a requirement of the MOT test. For petrol vehicles, the MOT test has included checks on CO and hydrocarbons since November 1991. I shall be consulting shortly on new regulations that will tighten the limits for all vehicles in line with the EC roadworthiness directive 92/55/EEC.

The Department regularly issues publications advising motorists and vehicle operators on the need for good maintenance and other measures that will reduce emissions.

In the longer term, the Department is pressing the European Commission to introduce a requirement for "on-board" diagnostic systems for post-2000 vehicles that will warn the driver in the event of a malfunction of the emissions control system and prompt him to seek immediate repairs. Such a system could be highly effective not only in promoting rapid repairs but in permitting more effective roadside and annual enforcement of emissions standards.

Traffic Area Officers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date traffic area co-ordinating division reached the decision that traffic area officers would withdraw from Driving Standards Agency work; when the Driving Standards Agency was notified; and when the unions were informed.

Mr. Key: The possible withdrawal of the traffic area offices from Driving Standards Agency work has been under consideration for some time, and the Driving Standards Agency was informed of the intention to withdraw on 1 June 1994. No decision has yet been taken on the precise date of withdrawal. This matter is on the agenda for a meeting with the unions on 11 July.

Car Design

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to urge the European Commission to bring forward proposals for (a) a side-impact protection directive and (b) a new European standard for car design for pedestrian protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We have already urged the Commission to bring forward early proposals for both of these.

London Underground

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing for each London underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 24 June the number of fire and smoke incidents and the proportion that were (a) category A, (b) category B and (c) category C.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The figures requested are available up to 28 May. These are shown on a line-by-line basis in the table.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 24 June the number of (i) crimes of violence, (ii) robbery and (iii) other offences; and if he will make a statement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the actual number of new jobs created by the establishment of the Child Support Agency; what was the original estimate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 30 June 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of new jobs created by the Child Support Agency.

The original staffing requirement for the Child Support Agency was estimated at 5,000 made up of 3,000 new posts and approximately 2,000 posts previously allocated to the Benefits Agency.

The Agency has now recruited up to its original requirement and is continuing to recruit to meet identified staffing needs. The number of staff currently in post is 5,268.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how often he meets the chief executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss the operation and policy of the agency; what is his best estimate of how long, on average, he spends at such meetings each month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does not have a regular schedule of meetings with the chief executive of the Child Support Agency. Although much of the contact between the chief executive and Ministers is in writing, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I do have frequent meetings with the chief executive to discuss items of particular significance. In addition, as Minister responsible for matters relating to child support, I have monthly meetings with the chief executive to discuss the operation and performance of the agency. Those meetings are usually of two hours duration, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, is kept fully appraised of the issues that arise from them.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the annual reports of the independent living (1993) fund and the independent living (extension) fund to be made available to Parliament.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the director of the funds that the annual reports of both funds will be published during the first week in July. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Benefits (Irish Citizens)

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions he has given to his officers at Neath and Port Talbot regarding residence qualifications for new entrants to the area from Ireland and their entitlement to social security payments.

Mr. Burt: None.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of social security payments made to caravan owners and their families coming to the United Kingdom from Ireland.

Mr. Burt: None. Information is not held centrally on the number of people coming to the United Kingdom from Ireland who are in receipt of social security benefits.

Information Technology Services Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the Director of ITSA has been paid a performance-related bonus for the most recent reporting year.

Mr. Hague: The ITSA chief executive's entitlement to a performance-related bonus is largely determined by the achievement of key performance targets for the agency. Details of achievement against these targets will be included in the agency's 1993-94 report and accounts, a copy of which will be placed in the Library before the summer recess.

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the decision to abolish reduced earnings allowance for people claiming industrial injuries benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Reduced earnings allowance for new accidents and diseases was abolished in October 1990 as part of a package of measures designed to focus benefit on those with the most severe disabilities. The REA may still be claimed for accidents occurring before October 1990 or prescribed diseases which were listed before then and where the onset of the disease was earlier.

A defect in the legislation also enables claims to be made in respect of diseases added to the prescribed list since October 1990, although only where the onset was before that date. This was never the policy intention. We shall bring forward an amendment with effect from October 1994 so that the REA will not be payable for any further extension of the prescribed list.

In the meantime, the Benefits Agency will carry out a special exercise to identify people who have been awarded an assessment of at least 1 per cent. for diseases added to the list since October 1990 and where the date of onset was earlier. Those people will be invited to make a claim for REA.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many steel manufacturing jobs there were in Wales (a) in 1988 and (b) in 1993.

Mr. Redwood: A total of 20,207 jobs in 1988 and around 18,000 in 1993. The steel industry has improved its productivity substantially and is an important Welsh success story.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of jobs in manufacturing in Wales (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The number of employees in employment in manufacturing in Wales in June 1979 was 315,000 and in June 1993 was 210,000. This reflects the remarkable growth in productivity in Wales over the period. Output per employee in the production industries in Wales increased by almost 70 per cent. between 1979 and 1993. There was also, over the same period, an increase in employment in service industries of 100,000.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many coal industry jobs there were in Wales (a) in 1988 and (b) in 1993.

Mr. Redwood: Some 9,200 jobs in 1988 and 3,200 in 1993.

Teachers (Assaults)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of pupils assaulting teachers have been reported in Wales in (a) 1973, (b) 1983 and (c) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not collected centrally.

Best-kept Village Competition

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to reinstate on a national level the best-kept village competition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This scheme was previously organised by the voluntary sector in Wales, but it has not operated on an all-Wales basis since 1991. I understand the voluntary sector considers that other schemes, such as the Prince of Wales awards and the Shell Better Britain campaign are better able to promote environmental improvements in local communities. I believe that this view has not really been contested to date.

Mussel Purification Centre

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will permit the mussel purification centre in Conwy to remain open until alternative arrangements can be made; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will explain the reasons for the closure of the mussel purification centre at Benarth road, Conwy; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what financial assistance his Department will give to establish modern mussel purification facilities in Conwy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Conwy mussel purification centre was closed at the end of the 1993-94 season because it does not comply with the minimum European Union standards for construction and hygiene set out in the Food Safety (Live Bivalve Mollusc and Other Shellfish) Regulations 1992. For the same reasons, the facilities cannot be temporarily reopened. The Welsh Office has been in contact with representatives of the local shellfish industry to offer advice on the availability of financial assistance from United Kingdom and EC sources for any private sector project to establish a new purification facility.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what restrictions there will be upon employees of the Welsh Joint Education Committee standing for election to the new Welsh unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office's view is that employees working for the Welsh Joint Education Committee would be disqualified for standing for election to a unitary authority under section 80 of the Local Government Act 1972.

BSE

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of compensation is given to farmers in Wales for each cow slaughtered because of BSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Compensation paid to farmers in Wales for an animal compulsorily slaughtered as a BSE suspect is an amount equal to 100 per cent. of either the market value of the animal or the monthly indicative market price—IMP—whichever is the lower figure. Where subsequent laboratory examination does not confirm that the animal was affected by BSE, compensation is an amount equal to 100 per cent. of the market value of the animal or 125 per cent. of the monthly IMP, whichever is the lower figure. The monthly IMP is a weighted average of prices of Friesian and Holstein cows, heifers in milk and in calf, and barren dairy cattle, taking into account the age distribution of cattle slaughtered as BSE suspects in the month. The IMP for July will be £890.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individual payments have been made to farmers in Wales as compensation for the slaughter of cows infected with BSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: It is not possible without disproportionate costs to separate the total amount paid out in BSE compensation into individual payments made to farmers. However, the total number of cattle compulsorily slaughtered as BSE suspects since August 1988 and up to 28 June 1994 on which compensation would have automatically been paid in Wales is 13,603. There are also occasions where because compulsory slaughter has not taken place compensation is not automatically paid. In those circumstances, each individual case is assessed on its merits and ex-gratia payments may be awarded.

Brynmawr School

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he received an application from Brynmawr grant-maintained school for extra grant.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have not received an application for extra grant from Brynmawr grant-maintained school.

Welsh Health Common Services Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provisions have been made to advertise for competitive tender the proposed privatisation of the supplies division of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The authority will be preparing specific proposals for market testing.

Repair Grants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken to fulfil his departmental commitment to discuss with Church authorities in Wales the need for repair grants arising from damage caused by atmospheric polluters.

Sir Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his reply, 21 June, c. 156]: A printing error was made in the final sentence. The figure for repairs to historic religious buildings should have read £577,331 in 1993-94.

DEFENCE

RAF Flying Training

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the practical viability of completing the full advanced flying training requirement at RAF Chivenor;

(2) how much would be saved annually by closing RAF Valley.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's study of the RAF's flying training organisation which I announced on 7 December 1993, Official Report, column 177, considered options for providing RAF flying training in the most efficient and cost-effective manner possible. The scope for carrying out flying training at RAF Chivenor was considered as part of this study. Chivenor does not, however, have the capacity to undertake all the future advanced flying training—AFT—task and, because it only has a single runway—compared to Valley's three—it would not be suitable for a high volume of concentrated AFT operations.

The study also concluded that, for operational reasons, RAF Valley should not be closed, and figures relating to savings which might result from its closure are not therefore available.

Service Forecasts

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the trend in pilot into productive service forecasts.

Mr. Hanley: There is at present and for the foreseeable future a sufficient number of pilots coming out of training to meet the needs of the Royal Air Force. Since the mid-1980s, the number of pilots entering productive service has progressively reduced because of reductions in the front line caused by "Options for Change" and other adjustments.

RAF St. Athan

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the on-going costs of operating the entire weapons range training requirement from RAF St. Athan;

(2) if he will estimate the costs involved in increasing the licensed weapons loading platforms and otherwise preparing the base at RAF St. Athan for the task of supporting weapons range training sorties.

Mr. Hanley: As set out in the consultation document issued on 7 December 1993, the cost of preparing RAF St. Athan for use as a weapons detachment facility is estimated to be around £3,500,000. In addition, the associated annual operating costs are estimated to be £470,000. The savings from closing RAF Chivenor are assessed to be approximately £127 million, at net present values, over 10 years.

Land Mines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many self-destruct mines have been recovered intact in Kuwait; and what are the policy consequences of this.

Mr. Hanley: Figures for the whole of Kuwait are not available. However, I understand that Royal Ordnance plc discovered 146 self-destruct mines in its clearance area, all of which, for safety reasons, it destroyed in situ, without attempting to establish their condition. There are no policy consequences from this.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the manufacture or export by British firms of anti-personnel landmines that are not of a self-destructive or self-neutralising kind.

Mr. Aitken: No such landmines have been manufactured or exported by British industry for over a decade.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's involvement with TECs.

Mr. Hanley: My Department liaises closely with the training and enterprise councils in areas where significant reductions in either service or civilian staff are planned. For civilian staff, all major decisions likely to affect employment are notified separately to the appropriate TECs at the time that they are announced, and the commercial companies providing my Department's outplacement service work with the local TEC to ensure the best direction of effort to help those staff made redundant. Service leavers are more dispersed geographically and obtain TEC services through measures such as the tri-service resettlement organisation's regional resettlement centres.

Royal Naval College

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 203, what further consideration has been given to the costs of maintaining the premises currently occupied by the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, if they were no longer used as a staff college, and if no other appropriate use could be found for them;

(2) what consideration he has given to the feasibility of locating all three service staff colleges at Greenwich, if buildings adjacent to the Royal Naval College which are currently vacant, such as the former Dreadnought seaman's hospital, were to be brought into use for this purpose;

(3) further to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 203, whether he has yet received recommendations concerning the future location of the three service staff colleges and the future of the Royal Naval College premises at Greenwich;

(4) what consideration has been given by his Department to the use of the premises formerly occupied by the Dreadnought seaman's hospital at Greenwich to enhance the staff college facilities at Greenwich.

Mr. Hanley: The defence costs study into training has examined staff training at all three service staff colleges. The study has completed its work and has made a number of formal recommendations which are now under consideration by Ministers. No decisions have yet been taken. We hope to announce the broad outcome of the defence costs study as a whole before the House rises for the summer recess.

Defence Satellites

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it cost to send into orbit the two defence satellites recently launched by a French ballistic rocket.

Mr. Aitken: Details of the cost of sending into orbit the two small defence technology research satellites launched by an Ariane 4 commercial launcher on 17 June 1994 are subject to commercial confidentiality.

Russian Nuclear Submarines

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments have been made by the nuclear-powered warships safety committee of the safety record, and conformity with United Kingdom nuclear safety standards, of the Russian Typhoon class submarine.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Russian authorities concerning visits by Russian nuclear-powered submarines to British ports during 1994.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions.

Clyde Submarine Base

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, countries of origin and dates of all foreign naval vessel visits to the Clyde submarine base since 1990.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Peace Operations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much in cash terms and in constant prices the Government spent in 1980, 1990, 1991 and 1992 on peace operations in east and central Europe involving British military personnel.

Mr. Hanley: British military personnel were not involved an any peacekeeping operations in east and west Europe in 1980, 1990 or 1991. During 1992, the cost of the United Kingdom contribution to the UN protection force in the former Yugoslavia was £64,310,000.

Air Training Corps

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Air Training Corps, with particular reference to units in Renfrewshire.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 21 February 1994, Official Report, columns 67-68. Those apply equally to the units in Renfrewshire.

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (1) those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult before legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them;

(2) his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Hanley: There is no statutory requirement for the Government to consult any of MOD's advisory non-departmental public bodies before legislation proposals or to publish any advice that might be provided, or responses to that advice. More recently, however, in line with our commitment to greater oppenness, my Department has placed the report by the National Employer Liaison Committee on the subject of consultation with employers on the future of the armed forces, and a summary of the response by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, in the Libraries of both Houses.

South Georgia

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assistance military personnel have given to the refurbishment of the church on South Georgia;

(2) what funds are available for a grant towards the replacement of the windows and painting of the church in South Georgia.

Mr. Hanley: The work to refurbish the church at Grytviken, South Georgia was undertaken by tradesmen of the Royal Engineers who are part of the Falkland Islands field squadron. It was undertaken under the standard rules for military aid to the civil community and no charge was therefore raised for labour. No grant was available to defray the costs of materials used in the refurbishment—£3,100—nor was this sum provided from the defence budget.

Kirkcudbright Test Site

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the reply by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement to the Member of the European Parliament for South of Scotland on 24 August 1993 regarding depleted uranium testing at the Kirkcudbright test site.

Mr. Aitken: Yes. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Test Ranges

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has reviewed the future of the Defence Research Agency and the proof and experimental establishment at Dundrennan and Eskmead test ranges in regard to work conducted for his Department's testing programme on depleted uranium shells.

Mr. Aitken: The future of all our test and evaluation establishments was recently reviewed by the Director General of Test and Evaluation. Options arising from this are still being considered, but I hope that an announcement can be made in the not-too-distant future. This will be followed by a period of consultation with interested parties.

Volunteer Services

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost of (a) the Territorial Army and (b) the total volunteer services during the current financial year.

Mr. Hanley: The full cost of maintaining the reserve forces, including such things as equipment development, fuel, ammunition, accommodation and utilities, food or transport, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The figures for pay, allowances, earnings-related national insurance contributions and training bounties are as follows:

	1994-95 estimates £ million
Territorial Army	114·2
Total Volunteer Services	129·8

Those figures exclude the home service part-time element of the Royal Irish Regiment, and the TA non-regular permanent staff.

Territorial Army

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated recruited strength of the Territorial Army at the most recent available date.

Mr. Hanley: The recruited strength of the Territorial Army as at 1 May 1994 was 63,204.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the established strength, including overbearing, of the Territorial Army at the present time.

Mr. Hanley: The estimated strength of the Territorial Army in peacetime is 63,500. We would, however, expect this figure to rise to around 78,000 in times of war.

SCOTLAND

Playing Fields

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers he has to call in any planning application which relates to or includes the change of use of playing fields; what steps may be taken by the local community and by the district council to ensure that zoning for recreational purposes in the urban area local plans and the district local plans is adhered to; what powers are enjoyed by regional councils in relation to their role as strategic planning authorities as distinct from their role as property owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend is empowered by section 32 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 to call in any planning application for his own determination. These powers are exercised sparingly.

As far as district and community interests are concerned, section 18A of the 1972 Act provides that any planning authority must determine planning applications in accordance with the relevant development plans unless material considerations indicate otherwise. Sections 10 and 26 also provide that district authorities must take into account any representations made in their preparation of local plans and in their determining of particular planning applications.

As far as regional interests are concerned, sections 5 to 8 of the 1972 Act provide powers for the preparation of structure plans by the relevant planning authorities, and for their approval by the Secretary of State. Similarly, section 179 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 provides such regional authorities with powers to call in planning applications which are contrary to their approved structure plans or which raise major planning issues of general significance to the districts in question.

Infertility

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the provision for infertility treatment in the Tayside health board area;

(2) what provision is made for infertility investigation in the Tayside health board area;

(3) whether Tayside health board has sought advice from this Department as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area.

Mr. Stewart: A full range of infertility investigation and treatment is provided in Tayside health board through General Medical Services and at Perth royal infirmary and Ninewells hospital.

Following the publication of the National Medical Advisory Committee report on infertility services in Scotland in March 1993, Tayside health board is examining the needs of its population in relation to infertility services.

Fire Services

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the salary range of each rank of fire service officer in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Relevant information is as follows:

[3] The salary scale for an Assistant Firemaster is at 75 per cent. at all points of the scale of the Firemaster except where an Assistant Firemaster is appointed as Deputy Firemaster, in which case the salary scale is at 80 per cent. at all points of the scale of the Firemaster.

[4] The salary range for Firemasters has a minimum and a maximum for each of 9 population bands. The minimum shown is that for the lowest population band of up to 240,000. The maximum is that for the highest band in Scotland of 1,700,001 to 2,300,000.

This table reflects in summary form salary scales agreed by the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades and the National Joint Council for Chief and Assistant Chief Officers of Local Authorities' Fire Brigades.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the identifiable (a) capital and (b) revenue or current expenditure by Strathclyde regional council by regional council electoral division, or on any other geographical basis on which the data is collated or accounted, in each year since 1990; how much in both expenditure categories is (i) legally committed and (ii) planned for fiscal years 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the pro-rata expenditure in each category for each regional council electoral division, expressed as a percentage of the total capital and revenue budgets measured against their respective populations; if he will rank the regional council electoral divisions in decending order by level of expenditure in both categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information about the geographical breakdown of expenditure by Strathclyde regional council is not held by the Scottish Office.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the identifiable (a) capital and (b) revenue or current expenditure by Renfrew district council by regional council electoral division, or on any other geographical basis on which the data is collated or accounted, in each year since 1990; how much in both expenditure categories is (i) legally committed and (ii) planned for fiscal years 1994-95 and 1995-96; what is the pro-rata expenditure in each category for each regional council electoral division, expressed as a percentage of the total capital and revenue budgets measured against their respective populations; if he will rank the regional council electoral divisions in descending order by level of expenditure in both categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information about the geographical breakdown of expenditure by the Renfrew district council is not held by the Scottish Office.

Arthritis Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Arthritis Care to discuss needs and concerns of its members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Arthritis Care has not sought a meeting with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and he therefore currently has no plans to meet its representatives.

Renfrewshire Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most recent estimate of the population of (a) the area covered by Renfrewshire Enterprise, (b) each of its three constituent district councils and (c) each regional council electoral division within the area.

Mr. Stewart: The Registrar General's latest estimates for (a) and (b) are as follows. I regret that population estimates are not available for regional council electoral divisions.

Mid-1993 population estimates

	Estimate
(a) Renfrewshire Enterprise area	352,070
(b) Eastwood District	60,930
Inverclyde District	89,990
Renfrew District	201,150

Trespass

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the laws relating to trespass in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Simple trespass is not an offence under the criminal law of Scotland. However, the Trespass (Scotland) Act 1865 provides that it is an offence to lodge in private premises or occupy or encamp on private land, without the owner's consent. In addition, the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill contains provisions which extend to Scotland and which address certain types of disruptive behaviour often associated with trespass.

As regards the civil law, if someone intrudes on land without permission and without any other legal right to do so then this will constitute trespass under Scots civil law. There are two possible civil remedies open to the owner of the land. An action of ejection would secure the removal of a person from occupying heritable property without right or title hitherto. An action of interdict would seek to prevent a person from doing something, such as returning to the property. The two processes can be combined in one action, namely an action of ejection of a trespasser and interdict against his or her return.

Dog Registration

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the fee that would be required to be charged to fund a self-financing dog registration scheme in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Government do not believe that a registration scheme would address the main problems associated with dogs. No estimate of the fee which would be required to fund a self-financing scheme in Scotland has been made.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 in Scotland; what would be the total annual cost to (a) central Government, (b) local authorities and (c) other bodies of full implementation, what would be the total cost expressed in (i) annual and (ii) weekly terms for each (1) council tax payer and (2) taxpayer—including and excluding indirect taxation—when he plans to fully implement the Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Information on the estimated cost of implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 in Scotland is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

There are no plans at present to implement sections 1, 2 and 3 of this Act. Most of the major provisions of the Act have been implemented bringing substantial benefits to disabled people and their carers. The requirements of the sections of the Act which have not been implemented are now, to a very large extent, reflected in the new and wide-ranging community care arrangements which demonstrates our commitment to high quality care responsive to the needs and wishes of service users and their carers. We intend to review the situation once we have some years' experience of the community care arrangements.

Council Services (Contracting Out)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he or officers of his Department have had with councillors or officers of Kyle and Carrick district council regarding contracting out of council services; which services were the subject of these discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office provides advice to Scottish local authorities regarding the legal context of public procurement. Kyle and Carrick district council has sought general advice about the compulsory competitive tendering legislation and the European Community public procurement directives. Responsibility for placing individual contracts rests entirely with local authorities, who must satisfy themselves that their actions are within the law.

Evening Primrose Oil

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has funded into the efficacy of evening primrose oil as a treatment for arthritis; in what circumstances evening primrose oil is available on prescription; if he Department intends to fund further research into the value of evening primrose oil for treatment or illness and disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Two evening primrose oil products, Epogam and Efamast, are licensed by the Medicines Control Agency and are prescribable on the NHS. Epogam is prescribable for use in the treatment of atopic eczema, and Efamast for use in the treatment of mastalgia. No evening primrose oil preparation has satisfied the licensing requirements of safety and efficacy for any other medical condition.

The Scottish Office Home and Health Department has not funded, and has no present plans to fund, any research into the value of evening primrose oil for the treatment of arthritis or any other medical condition. However, the Chief Scientist Office of the Scottish Office Home and Health Department is always willing to consider any applications for the funding of soundly based reasearchable projects related to health and health services.

Mr. Andrew Freemantle

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the posts held by Mr. Andrew Freemantle before his appointment to his current position in the Scottish ambulance service.

Mr. Stewart: Prior to his appointment three yeas ago as general manager of the Scottish Ambulance Service Mr. Freemantle served for a number of years as a member of Her Majesty's forces, latterly with the rank of brigadier. Details of his career can be found in "Who's Who in Scotland".

Local Authority Direct Service Organisations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions apply to the sale of products to the general public from factories which are wholly or mainly owned by local authorities; if he will bring forward measures to allow local authority direct service organisations to sell manufactured goods designed for house improvement to owner-occupiers who wish to purchase these goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: It is for local authorities, in the first instance, to satisfy themselves that, in the individual circumstances of a particular case, their actions are within the law. The Government have no plans to bring forward measures in relation to direct service organisations and owner occupiers.

Disabled People (Voting Rights)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he takes to ensure that all disabled people are able to exercise their right to vote in elections for which he is responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 18(3)(a) of the Representation of the People Act 1983, as amended by the Representation of the People Act 1985, provides that returning officers should designate as polling places, so far as is reasonable and practicable, places which are accessible to disabled voters. The Government also provide financial assistance towards the cost of providing temporary ramps for polling stations to assist access by disabled voters. Guidance on this matter is issued from time to time to returning officers.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) adults and (b) young people on average participated in local enterprise company-sponsored training schemes in each month in the past two years; if he will break down these figures into local enterprise company areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Questions relating to the numbers of adults and young people participating in each local enterprise company area are a matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member with the figures requested for each local enterprise company and totals for each of their networks.

Police

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the latest estimate of the (a) normal and (b) overtime hours spent by police officers giving evidence and waiting to give evidence in each constabulary in Scotland; what was the total cost of this; what is the estimated burden on (i) normal payroll and (ii) overtime budgets expressed in cash terms and as a percentage of each budget; what was the effect of these duties on the ability of officers to be relieved of duties on scheduled rest days; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Current information is not available. The most recent estimate of which the Government are aware is that contained in the report by the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland entitled "Police Waiting Time at Court". A copy of the report, which was published in November 1992, is in the Library.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the police service and the procurators fiscal service to discuss initiatives to reduce the amount of time police officers spend waiting to give evidence in courts; what was the outcome of these discussions; and what new initiatives he intends to introduce.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's White Paper—"Firm and Fair—Improving the Delivery of Justice in Scotland" published, following consultation with a wide range of interests, on 27 June contains proposals which should contribute positively to reducing the time all witnesses have to spend in court.

Low Moss Prison

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to extending Low Moss prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no plans to extend Low Moss prison, but the Scottish Prison Service's estates strategy does anticipate that a feasibility study will be carried out at a future date to examine the possibility of replacing the existing hutted prisoner accommodation by the construction of new houseblocks, adjacent to the present site. The study has not yet been commissioned and if, in the light of it, a project were to proceed, planning consent would be necessary and decisions on financing, which have not yet been taken, would be required.

Obscene Publications Branch

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to future national co-ordination between police forces in Scotland, England and Wales on matters relating to pornography and obscenity following the proposed disbanding of the obscene publications branch at Scotland Yard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 June 1994]: Each chief constable in Scotland is responsible for the investigation of crime in his force area. Where cross-force crime occurs, collaborative arrangements can be established to deal with it. These arrangements work satisfactorily, and there are no proposals to change existing procedures.

Metropolitan police headquarters functions and specialist units fall within the scope of a restructuring exercise, which aims to make the best possible use of resources and to place functions where they are most appropriate. I understand that no proposals about the future of the Metropolitan police's obscene publications branch have yet been made.

Sandeel Fishing

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what measures he intends to take to protect the livelihoods of East Neuk of Fife fishermen affected by the sandeel fishing of Danish vessels over traditional Fife fishing grounds;

(2) what representations he has made on behalf of East Neuk of Fife fishermen to the Danish Government about the extent of sandeel fishing over traditional Fife fishing grounds.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 29 June 1994]: Sandeels are normally caught with only minimal by-catches of other species. By-catches of whitefish species will typically comprise around 1 per cent. of total catch. The European Union also sets maximum levels for by-catches of protected species, such as cod and haddock.

Inspectors from the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency regularly board sandeel vessels to ensure that these by-catch limits are observed. In 1993, there were over 150 such boardings and no cases were found of a breach of the EC by-catch regulations. This year, up to 24 June, 38 boardings had been made of 36 vessels, again without any evident breach of by-catch limits.

All the available evidence indicates that sandeel vessels are operating within the terms of EC regulations. Even so, I recognise the concern in the industry at the possible impact which current levels of sandeel fishing may be having on other fish stocks and on the marine eco-system in general. At last December's Fisheries Council, the United Kingdom persuaded the Council to call for an investigation of the broader effects of industrial fishing. A working group consisting of fisheries biologists and marine ecologists from all relevant member states is expected to report later this year.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to date of implementing the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 June 1994]: Information on the costs to the police, local authorities, the prosecution and courts of operating the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 is not held centrally.

Regional Enterprise Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the REG awards in Fife on a six-monthly basis from start-up of the scheme specifying the company location, industrial sector, level of award and whether the award was REG (Investment) or REG (Innovation).

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 June 1994]: The information requested is given in the table.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which prisons alcohol abuse and misuse programmes are available to prisoners; how many prisoners (a) commenced and (b) completed the programme in each prison in 1991, 1992, 1993 and so far this year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [pursuant to his reply 15 June 1994, c. 610]: The chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 30 June 1994:

I wrote to you on 15 June in response to your question about alcohol abuse and misuse programmes within Scottish penal establishments and undertook to write again when the figures for Barlinnie prison were available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Middle East

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define the Government's commitment to the reconstruction of Gaza and Jericho following the middle east peace award (a) in terms of financial assistance and (b) in terms of technical assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Both financial and technical assistance are needed to support the establishment of a Palestinian administration in Gaza and Jericho. We intend to spend £70 million on aid to the Palestinians, over the three financial years from 1994-95, through our contributions to EC aid programmes and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, as well as bilaterally. The EC assistance includes 10 mecu in 1994 for the start-up costs of the Palestinian police force. Our bilateral aid takes the form of technical assistance, concentrating on providing know-how and institution building.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the public and private financial flows to each country in sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Available information is contained in an Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development publication "Geographical Distribution of Financial Flows to Developing Countries—1989 to 1992," a copy of which is available in the Library.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the extent of the emerging famine in southern Sudan;

(2) what assessment he has made of the degree of access that Operation Lifeline Sudan is being given to famine areas in southern Sudan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Food Programme estimates that 2·2 million people in the south and the transition zone will need emergency food aid in 1994. Information on access to populations at risk is contained in "The Delivery of Humanitarian Assistance: Issues Facing UN Agencies and NGOs in 1994" a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the causes of the famine in Sudan; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which the causes were man-made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Failed harvests, primarily due to lack of rain and inappropriate economic and agricultural policies, have resulted in serious food shortages in many areas of both north and south Sudan. The situation has been exacerbated in the south by fighting between the Government and rebel forces, which has displaced hundreds of thousands of people.

Ethiopia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the extent of the famine in Ethiopia;

(2) if he will make a statement on the response of (a) the British Government and (b) the European Union to the famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 10 May, Official Report, column 79 and on 23 June, Official Report, column 270. Information on EU member states' pledges is not available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Compensation Orders

Mr. Bates: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what was the total amount and number of compensation orders made by (a) Teesside Crown court, (b) Teesside magistrates court and (c) Gainsborough magistrates court in (i) 1990, (ii) 1991, (iii) 1992 and (iv) 1993;

(2) what is the total number and amount of unpaid compensation orders awarded by (a) Teesside Crown court, (b) Teesside magistrates court and (c) Gainsborough magistrates court in (i) 1990, (ii) 1991, (iii) 1992 and (iv) 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department does not hold this information. Information about the numbers of offenders ordered to pay compensation is contained in "Home Office Criminal Statistics England and Wales," copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Disputes

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will support pilot programmes for alternative dispute resolution.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has publicly welcomed the development of private and voluntary dispute resolution services, and their availability to parties who do not need the compulsion, certainty and finality that only the courts provide. The Lord Chancellor is currently evaluating the potential of alternative dispute resolution and the various research options which may assist him.

Small Claims Courts

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he intends to make a provision for costs in the small claims court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Although often referred to as a "no-costs" regime, the small claims procedure does provide for the recovery of some costs, as detailed in order 19, rule 4 of the county court rules. Under this rule, the costs stated on the summons and the costs of enforcing the award may be recovered. In addition, the court may award allowances relating to the party's and witness's expenses and to experts' fees.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many personal injury cases were pursued through the small claims courts in each of the last three years; and if he will place in the Library the number of cases pursued through each such court in the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The term "small claims court" refers to the arbitration procedure in the county courts. Until March 1994 only the total number of arbitrations heard in each county court was recorded. Statistics on arbitrations are now collected by nature of claim—for instance, personal injury—and the figures for the last nine months of 1994 will be published in "Judicial Statistics Annual Report 1994".

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the factors causing the rate of unemployment in Bolton to change at a different rate from the rate for the country as a whole in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has made no such explicit assessment. However, I believe that the Department has created the right framework for employers to create jobs and reduce unemployment in Bolton, as in the rest of the United Kingdom. Indeed, I am pleased to see that over the past 12 months unemployment in my hon. Friend's constituency has been falling faster than the national average.

ENVIRONMENT

Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his policy to provide financial support towards the costs that will be incurred by people from the United Kingdom invited to participate in the intergovernmental panel on climate change workshop on equity and social considerations to be held in Nairobi in July.

Mr. Atkins: My Department is providing financial support towards the costs incurred by United Kingdom experts who have been invited to act as lead or contributing authors for the IPCC's current work programme, including costs associated with attendance at relevant IPCC workshops. On that basis we are supporting the costs of attendance of one United Kingdom expert at the workshop on equity and social considerations. The Department is not, however, providing support for the attendance of other possible United Kingdom participants at IPCC workshops.

Staff Sickness (Local Authorities)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistics he collects on days lost through staff sickness in local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not collected by this Department.

Ornithology

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of funding is provided by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to the British Trust for Ornithology; and what this figure is as a proportion of the British Trust for Ornithology's total expenditure for each of the last four years.

Mr. Atkins: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee's contract with BTO will be worth £414,000 this year. Figures comparing the value of the contract and the trust's expenditure over the last four financial years are as follows:

£ thousands

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
BTO Expenditure	1,024	1,660	1,225	N/a
Value of JNCC contract	301	365	399	393
Contract as percentage of BTO expenditure	29·4	22·0	32·6	—

N/a—Not available.
Figures for 1990-91 are for BTO's contract with the former NCC.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost of administering the statutory bird-ringing scheme and licensing activities which are contracted out to the British Trust for Ornithology in 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Atkins: The British Trust for Ornithology operates a national bird-ringing scheme under contract from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. This scheme is not statutory. In 1993-94, funding from the JNCC amounted to approximately £112,000. In 1994-95, funding will be about £138,000. The BTO is licensed by English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales and Scottish Natural Heritage to issue permits for ringing or marking birds or examining any ring or mark.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the funding of the British Trust for Ornithology.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has received three written representations about the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's contract with the British Trust for Ornithology for the provision of bird-ringing data, including one from the hon. Member.

Biodiversity

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are now being taken to monitor and evaluate biodiversity in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The monitoring and evaluation of biodiversity in the United Kingdom are described in "Biodiversity: The UK Action Plan", Cm. 2428. A steering group, chaired by my Department, has a remit which includes reviewing and reporting on existing and future monitoring programmes. The steering group is assisted by a specialist sub-group on data, chaired by the chief officer, Joint Nature Conservation Committee, which is seeking to improve the accessibility and co-ordination of existing biological datasets and the integration of monitoring studies and programmes.

HEALTH

Health Commissions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health commissions are in operation; what are their functions; what is the estimated cost of each one; which health authorities have such commissions; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: All district health authorities and family health services authorities are developing close links in response to Government policy on integrated working.

Disciplinary Procedures

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what documents her Department has produced in the last year; what is the process of production in the disciplinary procedures against doctors; and when she will publish them.

Dr. Mawhinney: Documents from the Department are issued on a wide range of issues.

We are consulting representatives of national health service management and the medical and dental professions on guidance relating to suspensions and disciplinary action involving hospital medical and dental and community medical staff. Guidance will be issued to NHS employing bodies in due course.

Pensions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria she uses to decide whether those who have transferred from national health service to private pensions are better or worse off as a result.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses, doctors and other national health service employees by category have transferred their pensions from national health service to private schemes in each year since 1986.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table shows the total number of national health service employees who have transferred accrued pension rights from the national health service pension scheme to private schemes in each year since August 1989. Data are not available before that date and are not held by occupational groups. The majority of these transfers relate to former members of the scheme who have left national health service employment.

	Number
[1]1989	2,027
1990	6,938
1991	7,852
1992	8,434

[1] Figure from August 1989.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount of money given as inducement to transfer from a national health service to a private pension in each year since 1986.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Child Records

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities are using patient-held child records.

Mr. Bowis: Information from the British Paediatric Association, which has produced a model personal child health record, shows that currently 101 health authorities or national health service trusts are contracting for copies of the record. On the basis of the information from the BPA we estimate that the proportion of children issued with personal child health records has increased by about 25 per cent. in the last year.

Ethnic Minority Staff

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific policies or mechanisms were implemented as part of the programme of action for ethnic minority staff in the national health service launched on 10 December 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: The programme of action is for national health service trusts and health authorities to implement locally.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the provision for (a) infertility investigation and (b) infertility treatment in the North West regional health authority;

(2) what discussions have been held between the North West regional health authority and her Department as to the most cost-effective means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area.

Mr. Sackville: For the information requested about infertility investigation and treatment in the North West region the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of the North West regional health authority.

There have been no discussions on this matter between the North West regional health authority and the Department. The national health service provides a wide range of treatments for subfertility. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 18 May, Official Report, column 520.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to visit Queen Mary's hospital, Sidcup and Erith and district hospital, Erith.

Mr. Sackville: Ministers have no current plans to visit Queen Mary's Sidcup Hospital national health service trust.

Press and Public Relations

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) of 2 March, Official Report, column 763, how many press releases were issued by NHS trusts in each of the last three years; and if she will list those trusts with a named press officer or contact on those releases.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private psychiatric hospital beds there were for each year since 1979; and how many of those beds were for children.

Mr. Bowis: The number of psychiatric beds in private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984 is shown in the table for the years 1982 to 1992-93. On average, fewer than 100 beds per year are allocated specifically to children.

	Number
1982	1,994
1983	2,394
1984	2,176
1985	2,340
1986	3,165
1987-88	4,507
1988-89	5,864
1989-90	7,693
1990-91	10,722
1991-92	12,653
1992-93	16,946

The bulk of this growth is to cater for the needs of elderly mentally ill people.

Source: 1982-86 SBH212 returns. 1987-88 to 1992-93 KO36 return. Information not available prior to 1982.

Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of redundancy payments for local authority social services departments, by authority, for the last financial year.

Mr. Bowis: Returns from social services departments do not separately identify such payments.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount spent on consultants' fees by social services departments during the last financial year, by authority.

Mr. Bowis: Returns from social services departments do not separately identify consultants' fees.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what annual rate of reduction in hospital beds she has assumed for the next eight years; and what assessment she has made of the likely impact of such reductions on patient care.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him and the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 28 June, Official Report, column 536. We have made no such assumptions. The disposition and number of hospital beds is a matter for local determination. However, we confidently expect that future developments in medical science and technology and in clinical practice will enable an increasing number of patients to be treated as day cases or in their own homes, leading to reductions in the number of hospital beds required, continuing the trend in evidence since 1960.

Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Sackville: The council's role is determined by the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Acts of 1979 and 1992. It was reconstituted on 1 April 1993 so as to be directly accountable to the professions that it represents. We have no plans at present to change these arrangements.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings and communications she has had with officials of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting in the last three months.

Mr. Sackville: My noble Friend Baroness Cumberlege, the Under-Secretary of State for Health, met the president of the council on 19 April to discuss its proposals for post-registration education and practice, and officials maintain regular contact with the council on a range of issues.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate her responsibilities in relation to the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for appointing one third of the council's members and for making orders relating to its constitution and statutory functions.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to set up an inquiry into the running and function of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is for the council to determine its methods of working.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each NHS trust in the former Northern region, those chairmen and non-executive directors who live outside the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 June 1994]: Some 151 or 77 per cent. of the 197 chairmen and non-executive directors appointed to national health service trusts within the former Northern region live within the boundaries of the district health authority in which that trust is situated. Necrotising fasciitis

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list research projects into (a) vaccination and (b) other preventive measures against necrotising fasciitis in British hospitals and universities in the past 10 years; and what consultations she has had with the chief medical officer of health and the Medical Research Council concerning their assessment and funding.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Necrotising fasciitis is a very rare condition which may be caused by a large number of different infections. For this reason, it is not feasible to develop a single vaccine against necrotising fasciitis. It is difficult to envisage the circumstances in which a vaccine might be useful against such a rare condition, which is associated with varying aetiological organisms.

There is a large body of research on the prevention of hospital-acquired infection of all types, which would include prevention of infections that might cause post-operative necrotising fasciitis.

There is considerable general research into infection with group A streptococci, the organism which was the cause of the recent cases of necrotising fasciitis in Gloucestershire.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly consults the Chief Medical Officer and others about research matters.

For details of Medical Research Council research into necrotising fasciitis, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 14 June, Official Report, column 434.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which dates the Minister of State met representatives of each of the major constitutional parties since 1 September 1993 to discuss political developments in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Since 1 September 1993, I have had meetings with the main Northern Ireland parties on the following dates:

Ulster Unionist Party (UUP)	Ulster Democratic Unionist Party (UDUP)	Social Democratic and Labour Party (SDLP)	Alliance Party
25 September 1993	1 October 1993	22 September 1993	15 September 1993

7 March 1994	—	12 April 1994	24 February 1994
14 April 1994	—	—	—

I have also attended meetings between the Prime Minister and the UDUP on 9 November 1993 and 21 March 1994, and between my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and the Alliance party on 22 March 1994.

Disabled Voters

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he takes to ensure that all disabled people are able to exercise their right to vote in elections for which he is responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Section 14 (4) (d) of the Electoral Law Act (Northern Ireland) 1962 as substituted by article 6(1) of the Electoral Law (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 requires the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland to prepare polling station schemes. Such a scheme can require the provision of facilities to be made available for the disabled. The Government also provide financial assistance towards the cost of providing temporary ramps for access at polling stations and, in addition, disabled people may take advantage of the arrangements for postal and proxy voting should they find this more convenient.

Tourism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tourist visitors there are in each council area, by such categories as are convenient; and what is his estimate of the number of day trippers to each council area for each of the last three years.

Mr. Tim Smith: The table indicates estimated total visitor numbers to each council area for 1991, 1992 and 1993. Figures are not available for day trippers.

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by how many the number of jobs in the British iron and steel industry changed in each successive year since 1979; and what was the output in million tonnes of the British iron and steel industry in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: The figures are as follows:

Notes:

(1) All figures are based on ECSC figures.

(2) The figure for pig iron production should not be added to the crude steel production figures to give a total figure as this would involve double counting.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the public moneys which have been devoted to sustaining the engineering steel industries of each of the other EC states in each of the last three years and of the sums which will be so expended during 1994-95.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is insufficient information available on which to base a reliable estimate.

Receivers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to preventing accountants who have acted as advisers to banks from acting as receivers of client companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have considered the arguments for and against preventing accountants who act as advisers to banks from acting as receivers of client companies and I am not convinced that the practice should be proscribed.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made as to the possibility of a conflict of interest arising from the business relationship between the Post Office and Lex Service Group for the chief executive of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is satisfied that there is no conflict of interest.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he was consulted over the appointment of the chief executive of the Post Office as a non-executive director of the Lex Service Group.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the advice of his Department has been sought over commercial relations between Lex Service Group and the Post Office in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: No, nor would my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade expect to be consulted. Such matters are within the operational responsibilities of the Post Office.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the maximum level of dust measured at each colliery operated by British Coal during each of the last three years.

Mr. Eggar: This information is held by British Coal. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Fire Safety

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recommendations the inter-departmental scrutiny team has made to Ministers regarding the provisions of the Children Act 1989 and the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced the publication of the report of the inter-departmental review of fire safety legislation and enforcement on 22 June, Official Report, columns 228-29.

The report makes a number of recommendations for change, including some proposals which may affect the operation of the Children Act 1989 and the Registered Homes Act 1984 or premises covered by them. As my right hon. Friend made clear on 22 June, the Government are committed to full consultation with all interested parties before any changes are made to existing arrangements.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with the industry's regulator about the profits of regional electricity companies.

Mr. Eggar: Ministers meet the Director General of Electricity Supply regularly to discuss a wide range of issues. I understand that the director general will take the financial circumstances of the companies into account as part of his review of the regional electricity companies' distribution price controls.

EDUCATION

Public Bodies

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which the Government are required to consult prior to legislation proposals; and in respect of which bodies the Government must publish their response to advice supplied by them;

(2) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which have a statutory base;

(3) if he will list the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are required to lay their annual reports before Parliament;

(4) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to produce annual reports;

(5) if he will list his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which are required to publish their advice to Government.

Mr. Boswell: On the assumption that the hon. Member is using the definition of an advisory non-departmental public body adopted for the document "Public Bodies 1993", there are no such bodies which fall to be listed.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list any advisory bodies which he has set up in his Department since the publication of "Public Bodies 1993."

Mr. Boswell: None.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the effect of his Department's funding of the Special Educational Needs Tribunal on other education budgets.

Mr. Forth: None. The running costs of the tribunal will be met by this Department, which will itself benefit from some consequent savings in its own running costs. The Welsh Office will contribute in respect of the tribunal's activities in Wales.

Bullying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action his Department is taking on bullying in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is concerned to ensure that all schools treat the issue of bullying seriously and take steps to combat it promptly and firmly wherever and whenever it occurs. We have taken a number of measures to help schools to tackle bullying.

In 1992, the Department issued the "Action Against Bullying" pack to all schools in England. We have stressed the importance of effective action on bullying in the guidance on pupil behaviour and discipline, published on 27 May as part of the "Pupils With Problems" series of circulars. We have recently published leaflets of guidance for pupils and parents on the theme of "Don't Suffer in Silence", and will be making available soon to all television channels a public information film on the same theme. In addition, we intend to publish in the autumn further practical guidance for schools in England based on DFE-funded research at Sheffield university into strategies against bullying.

Nursery Education

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of three and four-year-old children attend a state-run nursery school or nursery class in each local education authority area in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on pupils under five being taught in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in primary schools in each local education authority in Yorkshire and Humberside in January 1993 is shown in the table.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many primary schools there are of fewer than 20 pupils in each of the English county authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of maintained primary schools with fewer than 20 pupils in each of the non-metropolitan counties in England in January 1993 is shown in the table.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many primary schools of fewer than 20 pupils were judged to have failed to meet educational standards in inspections during 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the indpendent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Professor Sutherland to write the hon. Member.

National Curriculum

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table outlining the costs of implementing the national curriculum; what are the costs so far of the current review procedure; and what is the forecast cost of the national curriculum subjects to be implemented in September 1995.

Mr. Robin Squire: The main elements of direct Government expenditure since 1988 on developing and implementing the national curriculum in England are as follows (in £ million):

	1988-94 (outturn)	1994-95 (estimate)
Grants for Education, Support and Training (GEST):	457	93
Government grants to:
National Curriculum Council:	37	—
School Examinations and Assessment Council:	66	—
School Curriculum and Assessment Authority:	21	32
Direct expenditure by the Department for Education:	29	8
Totals	611	133

Notes:

1. GEST is mainly in respect of books, equipment, training and assessment related to the basic curriculum as a whole (that is the National Curriculum, including information technology plus religious education and sex education).
2. Grants to the NCC and SEAC cover the period from 15 August 1988 to 31 December 1993. The grant to SEAC includes some elements attributable to Wales.
3. Grants to SCAA cover the period from 1 October 1993 to 31 March 1995. The grant in 1993-94 includes some elements attributable to Wales.
4. Direct expenditure by the DFE excludes staff costs and grants to the NCC, SEAC and SCAA.

The cost of the review of the national curriculum in England is estimated at £9·3 million. This includes:

(i) £755,000 for the interim and final Dearing reports on the national curriculum,

(ii) £528,000 for work on slimming down the curriculum by SCAA and its advisory groups (excluding SCAA internal staff costs),

(iii) an estimated £2 million for the current consultation on the revised curriculum proposals (including the cost of publishing and distributing the consultation documents and a report on the outcome of consultation), and

(iv) an estimated £6 million for the publication and distribution of the final subject documents in January 1995 (excluding staff costs).

These estimates are subsumed within the expenditure figures for NCC, SCAA and DFE above.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints were received by his Department about (a) the Government's advertisements for grant-maintained status which appeared in January and February and (b) the information published by governing bodies about grant-maintained status in the run-up to a ballot taking place.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has received 61 letters concerning the advertising campaign, of which 54 have been letters of complaint. These figures include letters from correspondents who have written on more than one occasion.

Over the past 18 months, the Department has received 13 complaints about the accuracy of information disseminated by governing bodies prior to school ballots for grant-maintained status.

Assessment and Testing

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what his plans are for the assessment and testing of seven, 11 and 14-year-olds in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: High educational standards are of crucial importance for our children and to improve our international competitiveness. The chairman of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, Sir Ron Dearing, has confirmed that the tests are educationally sound and the independent school inspectorate, Ofsted, has found that they are raising standards. The Government are determined that these benefits should be extended to all state schools in 1995. To that end, I propose to introduce next year a system of external marking and, where appropriate, additional supply cover. These arrangements will ensure that the tests are marked to tough and objective standards by outside agencies and that the results are made available quickly.

The 1995 assessment and testing arrangements

Detailed proposals for assessing and testing seven, 11 and 14-year-olds next year are set out in a consultation document to be published today. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is making parallel and appropriate arrangements. We shall continue with mandatory tests for seven and 14-year-olds and, as already announced, introduce mandatory national tests for 11-year-olds following this summer's large-scale pilot. As an integral part of these arrangements, teachers will also make their own assessment of pupils' progress in English, mathematics and science to set alongside the test results.

The tests focus on the vital basics of English, mathematics and science and are therefore unaffected by changes to the curriculum. There has been extensive teacher involvement in their development, which will ensure that the tests are fair and appropriate for all pupils, while remaining rigorous.

Teachers' work load

In order to meet concerns about work load, the tests have already been streamlined. The time taken up by testing was halved in 1994 compared with the year before and the marking and administration were greatly

However, I intend to take more radical action. I propose to:

- introduce external marking for the tests of 11 and 14-year-olds.
- fund supply cover for teachers of seven-year-olds engaged on administering tests and for any teachers of 11 and 14-year-olds responsible for administering practical classroom tests to the least able pupils in these age groups;
- end mandatory external audit of teachers' own assessments of classroom work—although audit of teachers' marking of the English and mathematics tests for seven-year olds will continue.

Taken together, these steps mean that there can be no possible defensible case for industrial action against the tests. The ending of mandatory audit of teachers' own assessments places increased reliance on their professional judgment so far as their own direct area of responsibility is concerned. Although many more schools carried out the tests this year, a substantial number did not, allegedly on the grounds that they involved excessive work load. The arrangements for external marking and supply cover will now remove any vestige of a case on work load grounds for not carrying out the tests in 1995. Parents will not understand if, with no plausible argument based on work load, the demonstrable benefits of testing are denied to pupils because of ideological opposition by some teachers who refuse, in clear breach of their contractual duties, to simply hand out papers and invigilate examinations.

Accountability

A key function of the assessments and tests is to promote accountability to parents. In line with the parents charter, schools will therefore be required to report children's results to parents and to publish the school's overall results in all prospectuses and governers' annual reports. The new arrangements will ensure that schools receive results of their pupils' performance in the tests promptly. The results of seven and 14-year-olds will not be included in school performance tables. It remains the Government's policy that results of 11-year-olds should be included once the tests are established.

Results in national curriculum assessments provide an objective and reliable measure of a school's performance. That is the kind of hard information that I need when considering how to allocate scarce public resources. The results also complement the detailed published Ofsted reports on individual schools. If they are not available, I shall have to discuss with Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools the future format and pattern of inspections.

This is a package designed to raise standards. It will ensure that all pupils are tested in the basics at seven, 11 and 14. It will ensure that tests are marked objectively and rigorously. It will ensure that parents receive prompt and robust information about the strengths and weaknesses of their children's performance.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yemen

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international action is being taken to protect and care for civilian casualties of the Yemeni war in Aden.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council of the United Nations adopted on 29 June a second resolution, No. 931, expressing its deep concern at the humanitarian situation and requesting the Secretary-General to urgently address the needs of those affected by the conflict, in particular the inhabitants of Aden. The International Committee of the Red Cross is active in Yemen, including Aden, and we have responded to its appeal for donations.

Israel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the effect of new Israeli settlements in the Golan Heights on the peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regularly raise the issue of settlements with our Israeli interlocutors. We welcome recent signs of progress on the Syrian track and Prime Minister Rabin's statements that his Government are prepared to dismantle settlements for peace. We consider all settlements in the occupied territories to be illegal and an obstacle to peace.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals over retirement age are in receipt of an invalidity addition to their pension.

Mr. Scott: At 4 April 1992, the latest date for which information is available, there were 47,000 invalidity benefit recipients over pension age also receiving an invalidity allowance[1]. At 30 September 1993, the latest date for which information is available, there were 128,000 retirement pensioners receiving an increase of retirement pension for invalidity under section 47 of the Social Security (Contributions and Benefits) Act 1992[2].

Child Support Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to publish details of the performance and targets of the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Child Support Agency's annual report for 1993-94 and business plan for 1994-95 will be published on Monday 4 July. Copies will be available in the Vote Office from 10.30 am.

Mine Workers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been considered under the scheme to provide compensation for former mine workers who suffer from serious bronchitis and emphysema; how many of those have been accepted; and how many were secured and accepted in each region.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table gives the information by Benefits Agency area directorate as at 19 June 1994, not all the claims received would have been decided by that date:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Desertification

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much additional funding will be made available by the United Kingdom to assist in the implementation of the international convention to combat desertification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are currently providing substantial funding to assist developing countries to combat desertification. The provision of any additional funding will depend on the extent to which those of our developing country partners that ratify the convention implement the approaches it promotes. Funding decisions will also depend on the degree of priority that they give to such activities in relation to other projects and programmes proposed by them for our support.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation of the international convention to combat desertification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The text of the convention was adopted on 18 June. It is likely to come into force next year.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the United Kingdom has to ratify the international convention to combat desertification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are studying the provisions of the convention. No decision has been taken on signature or ratification.

Nigeria

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to resist the imposition by the European Community and other international bodies of further economic and political sanctions against Nigeria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Sir M. Grylls) and to her on 29 June, Official Report, columns 684-85.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the extent to which repressive press decrees imposed following the annulment of the June 1993 presidential election in Nigeria have now been repealed; and what response he has made to such repeals.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Most of the repressive press decrees have been repealed; we welcomed those moves. However, two publishing houses were shut down by the military Government in the run-up to the anniversary of the 12 June 1993 election. We are concerned by this, and urge the military to reverse this repressive action.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish a table showing for countries other than the EC 12 for 1968, 1973, 1979 and 1988 the ratio of imports to home demand for manufactures on the same basis as in ratio 1 of table 15.10 of the April 1991 "Monthly Digest of Statistics" together with his best estimate of the corresponding figures for the years 1989 to 1993 and this year to date;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for countries other than the EC 12 for 1968, 1973, 1979 and 1988 the ratio of exports to sales of manufactures on the same basis as in ratio 3 of table 15.10 of the April 1991 "Monthly Digest of Statistics" together with his best estimate of the corresponding figures for the years 1989 to 1993 and this year to date;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for the EC Twelve for (a) 1968, (b) 1973, (c) 1979 and (d) 1988 the ratio of imports to home demand for manufactures on the same basis as in ratio 1 of table 15.10 of the April 1991 monthly digest of statistics together with his best estimate of the corresponding figures for each year since 1989 and the current year to date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 30 June 1994]: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for 1968, 1973, 1979 and 1988 the ratio of imports to home demand for manufactures on the same basis as in ratio 1 of table 15.10 of the April 1991 "Monthly Digest of Statistics" together with his best estimate of the corresponding figures for the years 1989 to 1993 and this year to date.

Mr. Nelson: This ratio was first published by the Central Statistical Office in an article published in the August 1977 edition of Economic Trends, presenting data on this and other ratios for the period 1968 and 1976. Comparable estimates for later periods have already been published in CSO "Business Monitor MQ12—Import Penetration and Export Sales Ratios for Manufacturing Industry," as well as in the "Monthly Digest of Statistics." Copies of both are available in the House of Commons Library. However, calculation of the ratio involves the use of quarterly sales information from manufacturing industry. The collection of such information was stopped in line with recommendations made in the 1989 review of Department of Trade and Industry statistics. As such, the most recent estimates for the ratio cover the 12-month period to end-June 1989, and are as published in the April 1991 edition of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" Estimates for more recent periods are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for (a) each year since 1987, (b) each quarter since 1991 and (c) each month since October 1992 the volume of United Kingdom imports and exports of consumer goods, intermediate goods and capital goods with EEC, non-EEC countries and total trade on a balance-of-payments basis to take account of the latest statistical revisions.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 30 June 1994]: The information requested is being placed in the House of Commons Library in a table entitled "Volume Indices of Exports of Consumer, Intermediate and Capital Goods—Balance of Payments Consistent."

Market Testing

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Departments which achieve savings through market testing and contracting out will be able to apply those savings for the benefit of their programmes.

Mr. Portillo: Yes.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which international rules and conventions require United Kingdom local authority self-financing expenditure to be categorised as public expenditure; and which states adhere to these rules and conventions.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Local authorities are part of the public sector and their expenditure is public expenditure. All local authority expenditure, including self-financed expenditure, in the United Kingdom has, for many years, been included in general Government spending under international conventions. These conventions were restated most recently in the "System of National Accounts", published jointly by the Commission of the European Communities, International Monetary Fund, Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, United Nations and World Bank at the end of last year. It is expected that all European Union and European Free Trade Association countries will produce accounts on this basis.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Addiction

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifications were made of drug addiction for London and for England in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is published in table A3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 10/94, "Statistics of Drug Addicts Notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom 1993 (Area Tables)". A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Police Baton Training

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources this Department will provide to finance the costs of special training needed to make available to all officers the side-handled baton.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for chief officers of police to decide how to equip and train their officers. The cost must be met out of normal police funds.

EU Meetings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the results of the meeting of the interior Ministers of the member states of the European Union treaty in Thessalonika, Greece on 6 and 7 May.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 18 May, Official Report, column 461.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what agenda has been proposed for the next meeting of the Justice and Home Affairs Ministers of the member states of the European Union meeting in accordance with title VI of the European Union treaty on 20 and 21 June in Greece.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The meeting took place on 20 June in Luxembourg. It was the third Justice and Home Affairs Council held under the provisions of the treaty on European Union. The main points dealt with by the Council were as follows:

The Council adopted the resolution on limitations on admission of third-country nationals to the member states for employment.

The Council expressed its appreciation for the Commission's communication on immigration and asylum policies and undertook to consider the possibility of including in a forthcoming work programme those aspects of the proposals which fall within title VI of the treaty on European Union.

The Council agreed the selection of consultants to undertake a study of users' requirements for EURODAC, the proposed automated fingerprinting system for asylum applicants.

The Council approved the budget for the European Drugs Unit for 1995. It appointed Mr. Jurgen Storbeck as director of the Europol Drugs Unit and decided to extend the temporary appointment of Mr. Willy Bruggeman, the acting assistant director, for a further six months.

The Council noted progress on the Europol convention, and commissioned further work by officials on the outstanding points.

The Council invited officials to continue their work on the customs information system convention with a view to its being concluded as quickly as possible. The Council agreed that the incoming German presidency would inform the European Parliament about the main elements of the draft convention. It also discussed progress on the European information system convention.

The Council heard presentations from the Commission on its overall strategy to combat drugs, and on its proposals on the legal protection of the Community's financial interests. The Council agreed that work on fraud should proceed on the basis of both the joint action proposed by the United Kingdom in March and the Commission's proposals.

The Council considered means of carrying on contracts with certain third countries on title VI matters. Officials were instructed to continue work in this area, with a view to agreement being reached by the end of the German presidency.

The Council agreed that work should proceed on the extension of the Brussels convention to matters of family and succession law.

The Council heard a report from the presidency which summarised the current status of work on extradition.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a list of the formal meetings at which representatives of the British Government have attended in accordance with article K3 of the European Union treaty since the coming into force of that treaty together with the subject matter under consideration at the meeting and the title of the official representing the British Government.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 16 May, Official Report, columns 339-40.

EU Citizens

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many citizens of the European Union to whom notices that their presence in the United Kingdom was no longer lawful were issued in the past 12 months had already been in employment;

(2) how many applications were received for residence permits for citizens of the European Union seeking to establish themselves in business in the United Kingdom over the past 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action is currently being undertaken as proposed in the Commission's communication on immigration and asylum of February 1994 to approximate the harmonisation admission policies for humanitarian reasons of the European Union member states;

(2) what action is being taken to harmonise schemes for temporary protection in the European Union member states as proposed in the Commission's communication on immigration and asylum of February 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific proposals for harmonisation in these areas have been put forward.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions have been taken under the European Council's 1992 declaration on principles governing the external aspects of migration policy to tackle root causes of various types of migratory movements.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific action has been taken, but the declaration has informed subsequent discussions on these issues between the member states.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were made over the past 12 months for persons to come to the United Kingdom or continue residence in the United Kingdom as persons of independent means on the basis of capital assets of £200,000 or guaranteed income of £20,000 and a close connection with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on persons of independent means applying for entry clearance, or admitted to the United Kingdom is not available. The available information relates to such persons with capital assets of not less than £200,000 or income of not less than £20,000 a year and a close connection with the United Kingdom, plus if there were no close connection, capital assets of not less than £500,000; 120 such persons were granted an extension of stay, and 140 were granted settlement, in 1993.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were (a) received and (b) refused in the past 12 months for a person to come to the United Kingdom as a business person under the immigration rules.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his decision to expel Dr. Xu Li-Quin as an illegal immigrant.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Dr. Xu is not and has not been treated as an illegal entrant, nor has he been subject to any procedures to expel him. He had been refused further leave to remain in the United Kingdom, in accordance with the immigration rules, following a decision by the Department of Employment not to extend its approval of his employment. That Department has now reconsidered the case in the light of further information, and as a result Dr. Xu will be granted further leave to remain.

Firearms

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to raise the level of fees for firearm and shotgun certificates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The fees for the grant and renewal of firearm and shotgun certificates are currently under review.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a list of all the subcontractors providing services at or relating to Blakenhurst prison; and if he will list in each case the services provided, the length of the contract, and the cost of the contract.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 30 June 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 1 July 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the subcontractors at Blakenhurst; the services provided, the length of the contract and the cost of the contract.

The subcontractors concerned and the services they provide are as follows:

Mowlem Training: Education
Worcester Royal Infirmary: Hospital
Maintenance
Robert O'Neill: Mechanical Services
Sword Brothers: Electricians
Detail Design Engineering
Marcom Camera Services
CHS Water Treatment
DJS: Painters
Westwoods: Carpenters
Wormold Britannia: Alarm specialists
Baron Pest Control
Elliot Brothers: Lightening Conductors
Huffey Construction
HMP Hewell Grange: Ground maintenance

Although they may not employ subcontractors without our express authority, the value and length of the contracts with subcontractors are matters for United Kingdom Detention Services to determine and to decide whether they should be disclosed.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the number of offences reported in each police force area in England and Wales for each quarter of 1993 and for the first quarter of 1994 for each category of crime;

(2) if he will give the percentage change in offences reported in each police force area in England and Wales between each quarter of 1993 and the first quarter of 1994 and the corresponding quarter 12 months previously for each category of crime;

(3) if he will give the number of offences reported in each police force area in England and Wales for (a) home burglary, (b) other burglary, (c) theft of a motor vehicle and (d) theft from a motor vehicle for each quarter of 1993 and for the first quarter of 1994;

(4) if he will give the percentage change in offences of (a) home burglary, (b) other burglary, (c) theft of a motor vehicle and (d) theft from a motor vehicle between each quarter of 1993 and the first quarter of 1994 and the equivalent quarter 12 months previously.

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 28 June 1994]: The available statistics for 1993 are in the form of notifiable offences recorded by the police. In view of the length of the relevant statistical tables these have been placed in the Library. Information for the first half of 1994 will be published later this year.

Betting and Gaming

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give consideration to allowing the sale of national lottery tickets in licensed betting offices.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I have no plans to reconsider the regulations made under section 12 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 which prohibit the sale of national lottery tickets in licensed betting offices.

DEFENCE

Dreadnought Seamen's Hospital

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the buildings formerly occupied by the Dreadnought seamen's hospital, adjoining the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, have been vacant and unused.

Mr. Hanley: The site, which has been vacant and unused for eight years, has been leased by the Greenwich hospital trust to the Greenwich health authority, which is responsible for maintaining the buildings in a wind and weatherproof state and for providing site security.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants are employed in his Department.

Mr. Aitken: The total number of civilian personnel employed by my Department on 1 May 1994 was 141,700.

Test Ranges (Radiation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessments have been undertaken by his Department's Defence Radiological Protection Service of the health and environmental aspects of testing conducted at the departmental test ranges at Dundrennan and Eskmeals.

Mr. Aitken: Although no assessment has been carried out this year, we intend to conduct a survey in the autumn.

Drivers and Batmen

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many posts for serving officers there are where there is an entitlement to the services of (a) a driver and (b) a batman.

Mr. Hanley: Information on entitlements to drivers is only held centrally for two-star officers and above—currently there are 114 such officers in posts which carry an entitlement to a dedicated staff car and driver. Officers below this level may be entitled to such facilities depending on the nature of their duties. The majority of these are commanders of Army formations and units, whose drivers carry out the same duties for them on deployments.

Information on all posts which carry an entitlement to the services traditionally carried out by a batman—usually a steward who can carry out the duties in addition to his or her other tasks—is not held centrally. There are currently 77 posts where the postholder occupies an official service residence and is thereby entitled to this service from the house staff. Other posts will carry a similar entitlement only where the representational and official entertainment obligations warrant it.

Arms Sales

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Richard John Rainey Unwin played in connection with (a) the Jordanian defence packages, (b) the Al Yamamah Saudi arms deal, (c) the Pergau and Malaysian arms deal, (d) the Oman arms deal, (e) the Brunei arms deal and (f) the Indonesian arms deal.

Mr. Aitken: It is not the policy of the Government to comment in detail on defence export matters.

SCOTLAND

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the actual expenditure on the environmentally sensitive area schemes in (a) Whitlaw and Eildon and (b) Stewartry in each financial year since 1989.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table:

	Whitlaw/ Eildon £	Stewartry £
1989-90	34,798	307,461
1990-91	45,155	456,357
1991-92	53,785	480,039
1992-93	54,735	511,826
1993-94	50,143	452,770

Mr. Lang: As explained in the answer I gave the hon. Member on 23 May, columns 21-22, individual ESAs are not given an allocated budget. Expenditure is contained within the overall ESA scheme provision.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the allocated budget for each of the environmentally sensitive area schemes in Scotland for each year since 1989.

Creutzfeld-Jakob Disease

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration was given to holding fatal accident inquiries following the deaths of three people in Scotland from Creutzfeld-Jakob disease; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office has been able to identify only one case reported by a procurator fiscal in which one of the causes of the death was given as Creutzfeld-Jakob disease. Consideration was given to the possibility of holding a fatal accident inquiry, but Crown counsel concluded that it was not appropriate to hold an inquiry in that case.

Dumbarton Sheriff Court

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the future of Dumbarton sheriff court.

Mr. Lang: A new site at Meadow Park in central Dumbarton has now been identified for the replacement sheriff court house and, subject to a satisfactory survey of the ground and completion of negotiations for its acquisition, detailed planning will start as soon as possible.

Dangerous Plants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to bring forward measures to restrict the sale from supermarkets, garden centres and other retail outlets of Dieffenbachia picta (Dumb Cane) and other species of that genus, or to make the prominent display of safety warning labels mandatory at sites of sale; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The conditions under which potentially hazardous plants are sold by supermarkets and garden centres is a matter currently being considered by the horticultural industry. This is an industry-led initiative and a good example of self-regulation.

Final consideration is being given to a voluntary code of practice which will be published later in the summer.

National Monuments

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will designate the Wallace monument in Elderslie as a national monument; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing all listed buildings in the Paisley, South constituency, their location, their category listing and the reason for their listing.

Sir Hector Monro: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Historic Scotland. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. Graeme Munro, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Graeme Munro to Mr. Gordon McMaster, dated 1 July 1994:

I refer to your written Questions to the Secretary of State, for answer on 24 June, regarding listed buildings in the Paisley South constituency and the Wallace Monument at Elderslie.

Copies of the lists for Paisley Burgh and the remainder of Renfrew District were enclosed with my letter of 19 May 1993 in reply to your previous Question about listed buildings (see Official Report, Vol. 225, col. 215). There have been some additions to and deletions from the statutory lists since that date and I enclose copy extracts to add to the lists you already have. I have also deposited this information in the House of Commons Library.

You have asked that the Wallace monument at Elderslie be designated as a national monument. It is already listed as a building of special architectural or historic interest. Among the set of list descriptions you already have you will find a copy of the list description for the Wallace monument in Elderslie which was listed category B on 10 June 1971. For each of reference, I enclose another copy of the description.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the level of expenditure on sheltered placement schemes for each regional council in Scotland; what is the per capita expenditure region by region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The planned level of expenditure by each regional authority on sheltered employment in 1994-95 and the per capita amount in each case is shown in the table.

Region	1994-95 Budget Estimate (£000)	Expenditure per capita (£)
Borders	53	0·50
Central	354	1·30
Dumfries and Galloway	41	0·28
Fife	1,321	3·76
Grampian	1,536	2·91
Highland	354	1·71
Lothian	1,470	1·95
Strathclyde	2,692	1·18

Nature Conservation Orders

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 917-18, how many more nature conservation orders he has granted or refused under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Scotland; how many are still in force; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: One further nature conservation order has been made by my right hon. Friend and is still in force, bringing the total in force in Scotland to 12. No requests to make such orders from Scottish Natural Heritage have been refused.

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 124, how many further prosecutions have been taken under section 28 or 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: As before, the information requested is not separately identifiable in the Scottish Office classification of crimes and offences.

Children's Play Areas

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available additional funding to district councils in Scotland to be specifically targeted on the installation of safety surfacing in children's play areas; what studies he has undertaken on the cost benefit of such surfacing; how much was spent by the Scottish health service in each of the past five years on the treatment of accidents associated with children's play areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to target resources in this way. District councils have complete freedom to determine their own priorities for capital expenditure on their general services programme. They are, therefore, free to invest in the installation of safety surfacing in children's play areas if they so wish. The Scottish Office has not undertaken any studies on the cost benefit of such surfacing and information is not collected separately about the treatment of accidents associated with children's play areas.

Right to Buy

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total revenue gathered by the sale of (a) local authority and (b) Scottish Homes houses in each year since 1980; what was the percentage of the housing capital programme for (a) each local authority and (b) for Scottish Homes which was financed from the sale of houses during the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is shown in the tables. Disaggregated details of receipts from house sales are not available for 1980-81.

Since 1980, the sale of public sector housing in Scotland has enabled over 284,000 tenants to fulfil their aspirations to home ownership, while generating capital receipts of over £3 billion for reinvestment in Scotland's housing stock.

Test Range, Dundrennan

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Defence or the director of the Defence Research Agency in regard to the future of the test range at Dundrennan, Kirkcudbright.

Mr. Lang: I am in regular contact with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence about this and many other matters.

Marshland

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his assessment of the value of marshland areas in lochs for the safeguarding of water quality; and what advice he has had on this topic from the advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 June 1994]: There is no doubt about the importance of marshland areas in lochs both for safeguarding water quality and for providing shelter for wildfowl and other aquatic wildlife. The United Kingdom is a contracting party to the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance and a total of 25 sites in Scotland have been designated under its terms. More will follow. In additon many marshlands and similar wetland areas such as fens, flushes and mosses have been notified as sites of special scientific interest. It is for Scottish Natural Heritage to advise my right hon. Friend in relation to these issues. The advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest provides advice to SNH where there are objections on scientific grounds to the notification of such sites.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he and SNH have had from the advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest in relation to the Lake of Menteith concerning the preservation of the peripheral marshland areas, and their value in controlling the chemistry of inflowing burns.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The statutory function of the advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest is to provide advice to Scottish Natural Heritage when there are objections on scientific grounds to the notification of a particular site. The committee does not provide advice to my right hon. Friend.

In its advice to SNH the committee endorsed, inter alia, the inclusion in the site of special scientific interest of the burns which feed the Lake of Menteith so as to maintain its hydrological integrity. It recommended that the width of the areas adjacent to the burns should vary according to topography, soil type and land use.

SNH accepted nine of the committee's 10 recommendations on aspects of this case but did not accept the recommendation on "buffer zones". It proceeded with "buffer zones" of uniform width to produce a boundary that would be more straightforward to apply in practice. The committee provided no advice on marshland areas, of which the site has relatively few.

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to have installed the necessary computer programme to enable the issue of top-up payments to those whose sheep quota entitlements have been adjusted; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1994]: The computer programme is already in place and the payments of sheep annual premium issued in May 1994 to more than 15,500 claimants reflected their latest quota position. This includes any adjustment already made to take account of quota allocated from categories 1 and 2 of the national reserve. Any top-up payments to producers whose quotas are further adjusted will be made as soon as possible after the adjustment has been made.

Departmental Books

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the titles of the (a) video recordings, (b) audio recordings, (c) books, (d) periodicals and magazines, (e) professional and trades journals and (f) other publications he has obtained for his Department since 1 June 1993.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1994]: During the period from 1 June 1993, a large number of books and periodicals have been purchased for use by my Department and its agencies. I regret that information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Rhydlafar Hospital

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hip and joint replacement operations upon Mid Glamorgan patients have been made at Rhydlafar hospital in 1992, 1993 and so far in 1994.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information for 1993-94 is not yet available. Figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93 financial years are given in the table:

Hip and knee replacement operations[1]

1991-92	137

Dental Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average salary for dentists offering a full NHS service in Wales in 1993; what was the average salary of a dentist who practises in the private sector in Wales in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. During 1993, general dental practitioners in Wales received £65,820,972 in respect of their NHS patients. On the basis that there were 834 general dental practitioners in Wales as at 30 June 1993 this would give average gross income of £78,922 per practitioner. The income for individual practitioners ranged from £2 to £276,437. Figures for dentists' earnings in the private sector are not available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental practices which offered a full NHS dental service closed in Wales in 1993; how many practices which offered the same full NHS dental service opened in Wales in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not available centrally.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered dentists there are in (a) Clwyd, (b) Gwynedd, (c) Dyfed, (d) Powys, (e) Gwent, (f) South Glamorgan, (g) West Glamorgan, (h) Mid Glamorgan and (i) Wales; how many of these registered dentists offer a full NHS dental service for the population of the above areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest available information, which relates to the number of registered dentists—principals, assistants and vocational trainees—in the general dental service as at 31 March 1994, is given in the table. Dentists practising in more than one family health services authority are counted in each FHSA but only once in the Wales total. It is not known centrally how many of these dentists offer a full NHS dental service.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he proposes to make for the filling of the post of chairman of the Development Board for Rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 June 1994]: An announcement will be made in due course.

TRANSPORT

M25

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will clarify the time scale for the pilot scheme to introduce variable speed limits by using electronic sensors to monitor traffic flows and activate message signs on the south-west sector of the M25.

Mr. Key: I expect the M25 controlled motorways pilot scheme to be operational by Easter 1995, subject to the granting of type approval for the new system by the Home Office, and to the enforcement procedures with the police being in place. The pilot scheme will be assessed after the first 12 months' operation.

Civil Service (Privilege Day)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the privilege day as granted to staff in his Department for the official birthday of Her Majesty the Queen is a privilege day within the meaning of section 3.5 of the civil service management code.

Mr. Norris: I can confirm that the privilege day referred to is a privilege day within the meaning of section 3.5 of the civil service management code.

Transport Research Laboratory

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on road safety research of the proposed reduction in the number of staff at the Transport Research Laboratory.

Mr. Key: The chief executive has assured me that the proposed reduction in the number of staff at the Transport Research Laboratory will have regard to the need to meet, in competition with other research suppliers, the Government's future requirement for road safety research.

Air Traffic Safety

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the near miss between two large passenger aircraft over Ilford at approximately 18.16 hours on Friday 17 June.

Mr. Norris: My officials have consulted the Civil Aviation Authority about this. They have so far been unable to find any evidence of an air miss on the day stated involving two large passenger aircraft in the Ilford area.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received of problems for aircraft following immediately behind Boeing 757 aircraft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Reports of this kind are made to the Civil Aviation Authority's national air traffic services, under the wake vortex incident reporting scheme. In 1991, NATS reported its findings from operating the Wake Vortex database in CAA paper 91015—"United Kingdom Civil Aviation Authority Wake Vortex Database: Analysis of Incidents Reported Between 1982 and 1990". The subject of B757 aircraft was covered in section 7 of that report.

Highways Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Highways Agency has spent on public relations to date; what is its public relations budget for this year; and to which companies it has awarded any contracts for public relations work.

Mr. Key: This question is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Simon Hughes, dated 24 June 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on how much the Highways Agency has spent on public relations; what is the public relations budget for this year; what companies have been awarded contracts for public relations work.

Latest figures show that the Highways Agency has spent some £38,000, excluding VAT, on public relations, mainly on regional press activity relating to road maintenance and construction schemes.

An overall public relations budget has yet to be established.

The Central Office of Information provides press services in the regions. The Highways Agency has its own press office to deal with national issues.

Railways (Objectives)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what objectives he has set for the chairmen of British Rail and Railtrack for 1994-95.

Mr. MacGregor: I have written to the chairmen, separately, setting their objectives. Copies of the letters have been placed in the Library.

Cones Hotline

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to public funds of the cones hotline.

Mr. Key [holding answer 14 June 1994]: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 30 June 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to public funds of the Cones Hotline. As this is an operational matter for the Highways Agency, I have been asked to reply.

The new dedicated Cones Hotline telephone number, which became operational in March this year, is costing approximately £450 per month, including call charges. Other running costs are not separately identifiable since they have been, and are still being, met from within budgets agreed before the Hotline was established.

Twyford Down

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total cost to date of court action taken against protestors against the M3 Twyford Down section; and what amount he expects to recoup from protestors.

Mr. Key [holding answer 27 June 1994]: This question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Denham, dated 30 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost of court action against protestors against the M3 through Twyford Down and how much we expect to recover from them.

The total cost of legal fees to date in connection with action against trespassers on the M3 construction site is approximately £216,000 excluding VAT.

The amount of award against the defendants is the matter for adjudication by the Court.

Batheaston Bypass

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which firm of private detectives is employed by the Highways Agency to monitor the Batheaston bypass; if he will give details of the value, period and purpose of the contract; and what guidelines and instructions have been given to the firm by the Highways Agency.

Mr. Key [holding answer 28 June 1994]: The question is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, is writing to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Don Foster, dated 30 June 1994:

I am writing in response to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Transport about the use of a firm of private detectives to monitor the Batheaston/Swainswick Bypass. This is a matter for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

Brays Detective Agency has been appointed by solicitors engaged by the Highways Agency. The appointment will last only as long as the firm's services are required, so its cost and duration are not known at present. The firm is being employed at Batheaston in connection with possible legal action to gain control of the land on which this much needed bypass is being built. Their instructions are to record and collate evidence relating to trespass on the construction site, so that such evidence may be presented in legal proceedings if required.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nitrate Sensitive Areas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made with the implementation of the nitrate sensitive areas scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Following extensive consultations on the nitrate sensitive areas scheme, I am very pleased to announce that details of the new scheme are available from today. The necessary Statutory Instrument designating the NSAs and setting out the measures and associated payment rates has been laid before Parliament.

The new scheme will build upon and extend the voluntary approach introduced by the 10 pilot NSAs in 1990. The 22 new NSAs cover 28 separate water sources where nitrate levels exceed, or are predicted to exceed, the EC limit of 50 mg per/litre and will add a further 35,000 hectares to the 10,500 hectares of the pilot NSAs.

Farmers in these areas will have the opportunity to reduce nitrate leaching from their land by opting to make substantial changes to their farming systems. The new scheme offers increased flexibility and farmers can choose to enter land on a field-by-field basis, within a range of options, into agreements lasting for five years. I hope that all farmers in the NSAs will feel able to enter land into the scheme.

The pilot NSAs are already demonstrating that NSA measures, are effective in reducing nitrate leaching. I am confident that this new scheme will make a major contribution towards ensuring the future viability of these key sources of public drinking water.

All farmers with land in the NSAs will automatically be sent an information pack about the scheme by their local Ministry regional service centre. Applications to join the scheme this year must be returned to regional service centres by 19 August.

The new nitrate sensitive areas scheme is one of the six EC-assisted environmental schemes which MAFF is launching this year as a consequence of the common agricultural policy reforms agreed in 1992. Total expenditure on the NSA schemes is planned to rise to £8·3 million a year.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 245

SESSION 1993–94

20th June—1st July 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
